PREFACE.

How strange a coincident in time, that I, in my eightieth year, am permitted to finish a work in honor of my kinsmen, at the same age our worthy ancestor, Deacon John Dunham, of Plymouth, had completed his labors for the benefit of his descendants.

In the preparation of this work I have found the task of grave responsibility and through the many years in which I have been employed in the compilation of records of the family there has been a continuous struggle. State, county, town, court, church and family records had to be searched to verify dates obtained through correspondence. Discussions with many on disputed questions arose from different versions of the same subject or conflicting records to such an extent that I was compelled to assume an independent position, and in doing so I may have erred in judgment. In the early history of the family in this country there was a marked tendency among the younger members of the families to leave the paternal roof and to seek new regions and become self-supporting and independent. In the choice of these homes they were very differently inclined, some preferring to live in the more populated sections where their family records were well preserved while others, with heartless consideration for a future genealogist, migrated to remote parts of the country where the records of their respective families were not as well kept. As a result of this latter migration much confusion has arisen in the writing and compiling a history of the family.

Attempts have been made to write a history of the family in different sections of the country, but this method has not met with success, as the records in these instances have been necessarily limited and not retrospective. In the preparation of this work the compiler has had access to the most reliable students in Dunham history and the latter have generously placed the results of their researches in his hands.

It is not claimed that this work is beyond criticism. After exercising all possible personal diligence mistakes have probably occurred and omissions may have been made, but such failures are simply due to the inability of the compiler to grasp all of the details of this Herculean undertaking.

To all those who have in any way assisted in the preparation or publication of the genealogy I tender my heartfelt thanks. I would cheerfully specify their individual contributions, but in view of the fact that so many have given the records of the same families, to insert them would lengthen the work to an unlimited extent and I have deemed it better to append a list of some of our kinsmen, located in different parts of the country, who have generously contributed their assistance in the compilation of this genealogy. The compiler has received some interesting contributions from noble friends outside of the family, and while these contributions were correct in many details they were limited in scope, and where they have been at variance with the continuous records submitted by our kinsmen, they have been laid aside, the compiler giving preference to the records handed down by the various Dunham families.

All of the records presented have not been approved by the compiler, owing to the fact that they were not proved to be clearly authentic to him and were not in unison with the general scope of the work. An opportunity is now presented to those who desire to make a more critical study of the Dunham family.

The anxiety, annoyances and loss of time and money are really insignificant with the pleasure I have enjoyed in prosecuting my researches. My advanced age and impaired eyesight will not permit me to prolong the investigation or to further discuss the subject.

In committing the work to you, I trust you will receive it kindly and take pleasure in its perusal.

EDWARD III.

EDWARD III was born Nov. 13, 1312, at Windsor Castle, and was the eldest son of Edward II and Isabella, dan. of Phillip IV, of France. His mother's life was stained with the foulest crimes and his father's death was revenged by the perpetual imprisonment of Isabella, and the public execution of her paramour, Mortimer. On the 29th of January, 1327, he was crowned King of England. Edward would not accept the crown without his father's consent which was obtained five days before the coronation. He was m. at York on the 24th of January, 1328, to Philippa, dau. of the Count of Hainault. Edward's mother and the Countess of Hainault were grandchildren of Philip III of France.

The times in which Edward lived, the circumstances under which he was placed, the influences brought to bear on his conduct, conspired to make his life restless and turbulent. To meet the demands thrown on him, he had to exert to the utmost all the energy of mind that he possessed and his whole life was of continual strife. As a legislator he was shrewd and magnanimous and as a general on the field of battle he was vigilant and courageous and he was successful in many of the conflicts which gave glory to the English arms.

Conquerors, though usually the bane of human kind, proved often in these feudal times, the most indulgent of sovereigns. They stood most in need of supplies, and not being always able to compel the people by force to submit to the necessary impositions, they were obliged to compensate them by equitable laws and popular concessions. Edward took no steps of moment without consulting his parliament, and generally obtained their approbation and support for his measures. The parliament, therefore, rose into greater consideration during his reign, and acquired a more regular authority than in any former time; and even the House of Commons, which, during turbulent and factious periods, was naturally oppressed by the greater power of the crown and barons began to appear of some weight in the constitution. In the later years of Edward, the King's ministers were impeached in parliament and fell a sacrifice to their authority. Some attention was paid to the elections of their members; and lawyers, who were, at that time, men of very inferior character, were totally excluded from the House during several parliaments. One of the most popular laws, enacted by any prince, was the statute, which passed in the twenty-fifth year of his reign, and which limited the cases of high treason, before vague and uncertain, to three principal heads: (1) the conspiring of the death of the King, (2) the levying war against him and (3) the adhering to his enemies. The Judges were prohibited, if any other cases should occur, from inflicting the penalty of treason, without application to parliament.

Edward granted above twenty parliamentary confirmations of the Magna Charta; and these concessions are commonly appealed to as proof of the great indulgence to the people, and his tender regard for their liberties. But the contrary presumption is much more natural. If the maxims of Edward's reign had not been, in general, somewhat arbitrary, and if the great charter had not been frequently violated, the parliament would never have applied for these frequent confirmations which could add no force to a deed regularly observed, and which could serve no other purpose than to prevent the contrary precedents from turning into a rule and acquiring authority. It was the effect of the irregular government during those ages, that a statute, which had been enacted some years, instead of acquiring, was imagined to loose force by time, and needed to be often renewed by subsequent statutes of the same sense and tenor. The frequent confirmations in general terms of the churches' privileges proceeded from the same cause and all would appear ridiculous if we did not consider the circumstances of the times. It is a clause in one of Edward's statutes, "that no man of what estate or condition soever, shall be put out of land or tenement, nor taken, nor imprisoned, nor disherited, nor put to death without being brought in answer by due process of the law." This privilege was sufficiently secured by a clause of the Great Charter, which had received a general confirmation in the first chapter of the same statute. Why this clause? Plainly because there had been some late infringement of it which gave it umbrage to the Commons. But there is no article, in which the laws are more frequently repeated during the reign, almost in the same terms, than those of purveyance, which the parliament always termed an outrageous and intolerable grievance, and the source of infinite damage to the people. The parliament tried to abolish the prerogative altogether by prohibiting any one to take goods without the consent of the owners, and by changing the name of the purveyors, as they call it, into that of buyers, but the arbitrary conduct of Edward still brought back the grievance upon them, namely, that it was contrary to the Great Charter and to many statutes. The disorder was in a great measure derived from the state of the public finances and could, therefore, the less admit of any remedy. The prince frequently wanted ready money, yet his family must be provided for and so was frequently obliged to employ force and violence for that purpose, and to give tallies, at what rate he pleased to the owners of the goods which he took into his possession.

The kingdom abounded so little in commodities, that had the owners been strictly protected by law, they could easily have exacted any price from the King. Especially in his frequent exploits, when he came to distant and poor places, where the Court did not usually reside, and where a regular plan for supplying it could not be easily established. There was no act of arbitrary power more frequently repeated in this reign, than that of the imposition of taxes without the consent of parliament. Though that assembly granted the King more supplies than had ever been obtained by any of his predecessors, the great undertakings of the King and the necessity of his affairs obliged him to levy still more, and his great success against France added still more weight to his authority. These tax impositions came frequently in spite of the opposition of the Commons. The continual remonstrances of the Commons, however unavailing, served to prevent the arbitrary practices of the court from becoming an established part of the constitution.

It is easy to imagine that a prince of so much sense and spirit as Edward would be no slave to the Court of Rome. Though the old tribute was paid during the years of his minority, he afterwards withheld it, and when the Pope in 1367 threatened to cite him to the Court of Rome for default of payment, he laid the matter before his parliament. That assembly unanimously declared, that King John could not, without a national consent, subject his Kingdom to a foreign power against the exorbitant pretention. During Edward's reign, the statute of provisors was enacted, rendering it penal to procure any presentations to Benefices from the Court of Rome, and securing the rights of all patrons and electors, which had been extremely encroached on by the Pope. By a subsequent statute, every person was outlawed who carried any cause or appeal to Rome. The laity at this time seem to have been extremely prejudiced against the papal power, and even somewhat against their own clergy, because of their own connection with the Roman pontiff. They pretended that the usurpations of the Pope were the cause of all the plagues, injuries, famine, and poverty of the realm; was more destructive to them than all the wars, and was the cause why it contained not a third of the inhabitants and commodities, which it formerly possessed; that the taxes levied by him exceeded five times those paid to the King; that everything was venal in that sinful city of Rome; and that even the patrons in England had thence learned to practice simony without remorse or scruple. They petitioned the King to employ no Churchman in any office of state, and they even spoke, in plain terms, of expelling by force the papal authority, and thereby providing a remedy against oppression which they neither could nor would any longer endure. Men who talked in this strain were not far from the Reformation. But Edward did not think it proper to second all this zeal. Though he passed the statute of provisors, he took little care with its execution, and the parliament made frequent complaints of his negligence. He was content with having reduced such of the Romish ecclesiastics, who possessed revenues in England, to depend entirely on him by means of that statute.

As to the police of the Kingdom, during this period it was still bad but certainly better than during the time of faction, civil war, and disorder, to which England was so often exposed. Yet there were several vices in the constitution, the bad consequences of which all the power and vigilance of the King could not prevent. The barons, by their confederacies with those of their own order, and by supporting and defending their retainers in every iniquity, were the chief abettors of robbers, murderers and ruffians of all kinds, so law could not be executed against their criminals. The nobility were brought to give their promise in parliament, that they would not avow, retain or support any felon or breaker of the law; yet this engagement was never regarded by them.

Commerce and industry were certainly at a very low ebb during this period. The bad police of the country alone affords a sufficient reason. The only exports were wool, skins, hide, leather, butter, tin, lead and such unmanufactured goods of which wool was by far the most considerable. Edward endeavored to introduce and promote the woolen manufacture by giving protection and encouragement to foreign weavers, and by enacting a law, prohibiting everyone to wear any cloth but of English make. The parliament prohibited the exportation of woolen goods, which was not so well judged, especially while the exportation of unwrought wool was made against the exportation of iron. The staple of wool, leather and lead was fixed by act of parliament in particular towns in England. But Edward, who commonly deemed his prerogative superior to law, paid little attention to the statutes, and when parliament remonstrated with him, on account of such acts of power, he told them, plainly, that he would proceed in the matter as he thought proper. There is not a reign among those of ancient English monarchs, which is more interesting than that of King Edward III, nor one where the domestic transactions will better discover the true genius of that kind of mixed government which was then established in England.

Edward was a prince of great capacity, not governed by favorites, nor led astray by any unruly passion, sensible that nothing could be more effectual to his interests than to keep on good terms with his people. It appears, however, that the government, at best, was only a barbarous monarchy, not regulated by any fixed maxims, nor bound by any certain undisputed rights, which were in practice regularly observed. The King conducted himself by one set of principles and the barons by another; the Commons by a third and the Clergy by a fourth. All these systems of government were contrary and incompatible. Each of them prevailed according as incidents were favorable to it. A great Prince rendered the monarchical power predominant, the weakness of a King gave reins to the aristocracy; a superstitious age saw the clergy triumphant and the people, for whom alone government was instituted, and who alone deserve consideration, were commonly the weakest of the whole. However the Commons, little obnoxious to any other order, though they sunk under the violence of the tempests, silently raised their head in more peaceful times, and while the storm was brewing, were courted by all sides, and thus received some accession to their privileges or some confirmation of them.

Edward III died on the 21st of June, 1376, and was buried in Westminster Abbey near the body of his Queen, Philippa of Hainault. CHILDREN OF EDWARD III. I.—Edward, commonly known as the Black Prince, from the color of the armor he used at the battle of Crecy, was born at Woodstock, June 15, 1330. At the age of five his father removed his family to Nottingham Castle. On February 9, 1337, he was created Duke of Cornwall—the first duke created in England. In 1343 he was created Prince of Wales. At an early age he engaged in the enterprises of his father and proved himself a daring soldier and an able commander in all the conflicts with the French and won great glory for himself and England. A prominent trait in his character was a readiness to listen to the advise of his father. While at Narbonne a messenger came to him from the papal regency urging him to allow negotiations for peace. He replied that he could do nothing without knowing his father's will. He so honored his father that when at a great feast in which he served at the King's table he would not sit down with him, declaring that he was not worthy to sit at table with so great a King or so valiant a man.

In 1346 Richard de Beauchamp, the Earl of Warwick, accompanied Edward, Prince of Wales, to France. The earl died in 1369. He was father of Philippa Beauchamp, who m. Hugh Stafford, whose son Edmund, fifth Earl of Stafford, was the grandfather of Margaret, the dau. of Humphrey Stafford, first Duke of Buckingham, who m. Robert Dunham of Devonshire. Edward espoused his cousin Joan, commonly called "the fair maid of Kent." She had been m. to Sir Thomas Holland, by whom she had children. She had a son Richard by the Prince of Wales, who alone survived his father. Edward d. June 8, 1376, in the 46th year of his age and had a character, illustrated by every eminent virtue, and from his earliest youth, till the hour he expired, he remained unstained by any blemish. His valor and military talents formed the smallest part of his merit and his generosity, humanity, affability and moderation, gained him the affections of all the world.

II.—The second son of King Edward (John and the two Williams having d. in infancy), was Lionel, who was b. at Antwerp Nov. 29, 1338. He was a man of great strength and beauty of person. He was m. in 1352 to Elizabeth DeBergh, dau. of Lord of Connaught, and third Earl of Ulster and head of one of the greatest of the Anglo-Norman houses in Ireland. Her mother was Maud, dau. of Lancaster, who after the death of her husband, who was murdered in 1332, was m. to Ralph Ufford. On Nov. 13, 1362, Lionel was created Duke of Clarence. This latter title was derived from the town of Clare in Suffolk, the lordship of which with other shares in the divided Gloucester estates had been inherited by Elizabeth from her grandmother, Elizabeth of Clare, the sister of Gilbert, the last Earl of Gloucester, of the house of Clare. Elizabeth d. in 1368 and left a dau. who m. Edmund Mortimer, Earl of Northumberland and Earl of March. He was sent by his father as Viceroy into Ireland and there proved himself inefficient as a ruler. After the death of his wife in 1336 a second marriage was proposed, and Humprey Bohun, Earl of Hereford, was sent to negotiate a match with Violanti Galeazzo, dau. of the Lord of Paria and with elaborate arrangements the marriage was consummated in 1368. Soon after the ceremonies he was taken ill and died. Personally, Lionel does not appear to have had any lofty aspirations. Thomas de Bergh, brother of Elizabeth, the wife of Lionel, who m. Lucy de Bellaque, dau. of John de Bellaque, was grandfather of Margaret de Bergh, who m. Sir John Zouche. Margaret de Bergh was grandmother of Elizabeth Bowett, wife of Sir John Dunham, who was dau. of Nicholas Bowett who m. Elizabeth Zouche, dau. of John Zouch and Margaret de Bergh.

Edmund Mortimer, who m. Philippa was the father of Anne Mortimer, who m. Richard, the son of Richard, Earl of Cambridge, and Maud Clifford and grandson of Edmund, Duke of York. Their son Richard, Duke of York, m. Cicely Neville, dau. of Ralph Neville, first Earl of Westmorland. These were the parents of Richard the 3rd, Duke of Gloucester, who m. Anne Neville, dau. of Richard Neville, Earl of Warwick, and Ann Beauchamp, dau. of Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick. Elizabeth Mortimer, a sister of Edmund, m. Henry Percy, known as Hotspur. They had Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland and Elizabeth Percy, who m. Lord John Clifford. She had Thomas Clifford, 1414, and Maud Clifford who m. Richard, Earl of Cambridge, who was executed in 1415, and second, John Neville, Lord Latimer. John Clifford was the grandson of Roger Clifford, b. July 10, 1333, and Maud Beauchamp, and son of Thomas Clifford, sixth Baron of Westmorland, and Elizabeth Ross, Mary, a sister of Thomas Clifford, m. Philip Wentworth. III.—Edward's third son was John of Gaunt, so-called from Ghent, the place of his birth. On August 6, 1335, he was created Duke of Lancaster. He m. three times: first, to Constance of Castile, by whom he had Constance; second, to Blanche, dau. of Henry Plantagenet, Earl of Derby, grandson of Edmund Crouchback, brother of Edward I; lastly, he m. Mary Bohun, dau. of Earl of Hereford and sister to the wife of his uncle, Thomas, Duke of Gloucester. By Catharine Swynford, he had John Beaufort, who was created Duke of Somerset, and Joan Beaufort, who was the second wife of Ralph Neville, who was the father of Anne Neville, who d. in 1480, and who had m. Humphrey Stafford, b. 1402, d. 1460, who was the first Duke of Buckingham. This duke was the father of Margaret Stafford, the wife of Robert Dunham.

Richard, son of the Black Prince, a boy of eleven years of age, succeeded to the Crown under the title of King Richard II, in accordance with a decree of his grandfather. The great change from a sovereign of consummate wisdom and experience to a youth of such an age was not immediately felt by the people. They were ready to admire him for the sake of his brave father. He was flattered by the lords and ladies of the court, who declared him to be the most beautiful, the wisest and best of mankind. To flatter a boy in this manner did not have a tendency to develop any good in him. Being a minor, the government was vested in the hands of his three uncles, the dukes of Lancaster, York, and Gloucester. The duke was supposed to have some thoughts of the throne himself, but he was not popular, and the memory of the Black Prince to the people was enough to force him to submit to his nephew, though on different occasions he took measures to embarrass the King in some of his enterprises. IV.—The fourth son of the royal family was Edmund, b. at King's Langley Hertfords, June 5, 1341. He was created Earl of Cambridge by his father, and in 1385 Duke of York by Richard II, his nephew. He was twice married: first, to Isabel, of Castile, who d. Nov. 3, 1393, and second, in 1395, to Joan, dau. of Thomas Holland, Earl of Kent, who surviving him m. three other husbands and d. in 1434. In 1347 he received a grant of land beyond the Trent, belonging to John de Warren, Earl of Surrey. He d. at Langley, August 1, 1402.

Edmund was the least remarkable of his father's sons. He was an easy going man of pleasure and had no care for worldly riches and was very much under the guidance of his elder brother and Duke of Lancaster. During the minority of Richard II he acted with his brother as guardian and when Richard took the government into his own hands, for three successive years, was made regent during the absence of the King. In transacting business the Duke of Gloucester paid little attention to the will of Edmund, as Lancaster had him under his control.

Richard II was unable to cope with the machinations of his uncle, the Duke of Lancaster, and he was accused of certain accusations which were presented against him and in consequence of which he was deposed. Lancaster immediately put his forces in motion and procured the election of his son, Henry IV, instead of Richard. This began the contest between the houses of York and Lancaster. The Yorkists were designated by the white and the Lancasters by the red rose. These wars extended from 1452 to 1494. Philippa, dau. of Lionel, second son of Edward III, sided with the Yorkists. CHILDREN OF EDMUND, Duke of York, son of Edward III. By his first wife: I.—Edward, during his father's life, was Earl of Rutland and Duke of Aumale and succeeded as second Duke of York. He was killed at the battle of Agincourt in 1415. II.—Richard, Earl of Cambridge, d. in 1415. He had been m. to Maud Clifford. III.—Constance, m. Thomas le Dispenser, Earl of Gloucester. She d. Nov. 28, 1416.

CHILDREN OF SON OF EDWARD, the Black Prince. I.—Richard, m. Anne Mortimer. CHILDREN OF RICHARD, Earl of Cambridge. I.—Richard, Duke of York, afterwards proclaimed King, m. Cecily Neville. Killed in 1460. CHILDREN OF RICHARD, Duke of York, son of Richard, Earl of Cambridge. I.—Edward IV, m. Elizabeth Gray, widow of a Lanc'n Knight, was proclaimed King in 1461. II.—George, Duke of Clarence, m. Isabella Neville, of Richard. III.—Richard III, m. Anne Neville, dau. of Richard. Usurped the Crown 1483. Caused death of Edward V and his brother Richard. CHILDREN OF GEORGE, Duke of Clarence, son of Richard, Duke of York. I.—Edward, Earl of Warwick.

V.—Omitting the two sons who d. in infancy, Thomas was the fifth son of Edward. He was b. at Woodstock on the 7th of January, 1354. He m., in 1374, Eleanor de Bohun, dau. of Earl of Hereford, Essex and Northampton. Through his wife he was styled Earl of Essex. Having been knighted by his father at Windsor on the 23rd of April, 1377, he carried the sceptre and the dove at the coronation of his nephew, Richard II, and was created Earl of Buckingham. During the summer and fall of 1380, he was engaged in a conflict with his brother Edmund, against a French and Spanish fleet which had been raging the southern coast and averted a landing at Dover. Thomas's relation with his elder brother, John of Gaunt, had never been cordial. Lancaster had inflicted a marked slight upon him by putting his own, afterwards Henry IV, a mere boy into the order of the Garter in preference to him. Thomas had a forgiving and magnanimous disposition. During his absence in France, Lancaster m. his son, Henry IV, to Mary Bohun, younger sister of his wife. Richard II, in 1381, determined to rule through his own means, drew together his uncles, Thomas and Lancaster. They were associated together in the expedition into Scotland and in the negotiations with France and Flanders.

When Lancaster was accused of treason at Salisbury, Thomas burst into the King's chamber, and swore with a great oath to kill any one who should bring such charges against his brother. Richard for a time deferred more to his uncles, to cover his own designs. On the sixth of August, 1385, he created Thomas Duke of Gloucester and Edmund Duke of York, and by letters patent made them grants from the exchequer. Richard hoped, by elevating his younger uncles, Thomas and Edmund, to sow fresh dissension between them and John of Gaunt, and to cover his promotion of his humble born minister, Michael de la Pole, to the Earldom of Suffolk. If so, it did not serve its purpose, for Gloucester on Lancaster's departure to Spain placed himself openly at the head of the opposition to the King, and was one of the judges, who condemned Suffolk in 1386, and a member of the commission for the reform of the household and realm.

Richard is alleged to have plotted his murder at dinner but such charges were made too freely at the time to command implicit credence, but Gloucester, who forced Richard to dismiss Suffolks by threatening him with the fate of Edward II, had certainly given provocation. When the King, in 1387, procured a declaration from the judges, that the authors of the commission were guilty of treason and began to raise forces, Gloucester and his friends sought to avert the storm by swearing a solemn oath, that they had been actuated by no personal motives, but only by anxiety for Richard's own honor and interests. Gloucester, however, refused to forego his revenge on De Vere, whom the King had made Duke of Ireland. De Vere had repudiated his niece for a Bohemian serving woman. Failing to obtain support from the Londoners against Gloucester, who took arms with the Earls of Arundel and Warwick, Richard affected to agree to the impeachment of his favorites in the parliament which was to meet in 1388. But on his sending the Duke of Ireland to raise an army in Cheshire, and attempting to pack the parliament, the three lords met and talked of deposing the King, joined by the Earls of Derby and Nottingham they routed De Vere, and the Londoners opening their gates, they got admission to the Tower and entered the presence of the helpless King with linked arms. Gloucester showed him their forces on Tower Hill and soothed his mind by assurances, that ten times their number were ready to join in destroying the traitors to the King and the realm. Had Gloucester not been overruled by Derby and Nottingham, Richard would have been deposed, and he was no doubt responsible for the vindictiveness of the parliament. Gloucester and his associates held the reins of power for more than a year, not without some attempt to justify their promises of reform, but they did not hesitate to obtain parliamentary grants by way of reimbursing them for their patriotic sacrifices. Gloucester also secured the lordship of Holderness, the castle town and manor of Oakham, with the sheriffdome of Rutland, which had belonged to his wife's ancestors; and the office of chief justice of Chester and North Wales, which gave him a hold over a district attached to Richard by local loyalty.

The King resuming the government, in 1389, and promising his subjects better government, Gloucester was naturally in disgrace, but through the good offices of the Earl of Northumberland and of John of Gaunt, his peace was made and Grants were made to him and his brothers, but he doubtless felt that he had no real influence with the King. Early in 1392, Richard appointed Gloucester his lieutenant in Ireland, only to supersede him suddenly in favor of the young Earl of March. Gloucester was then holding an inquiry into a London riot, but this may not have been the cause of his supercession. The King, it is worth noticing, was seeking the canonization of Edward II, with whose fate he had been threatened by his uncle a few years before.

The Cheshire men rose against Gloucester and Lancaster in 1393, while they were negotiating at Calais, in the belief that it was the King's wish, and Richard had to publish a disavowal. There was some reason at this time to think the Earl of Arundel was trying to force on a crisis. Gloucester had now to give up his post as chief justice of Chester to Richard's henchman, Nollingham, but was consoled with a fresh grant of Holderness and Oakham and certain estates that had belonged to De Vere, yet he could not but have been uneasy by the King's quiet attacks upon the work of parliament and his serious breach with Arundell, after the Queen's death in June, 1394. Richard took Gloucester with him to Ireland in the fall of 1394, but sent him back the following spring to obtain a grant from the new parliament. It is plain that the relations of Gloucester with the court were getting strained. The courtiers accused the duke of malice and cunning and said that he had a good head, but was proud and wonderfully overbearing in his manners. His advocacy of coercion to make the Gascons receive John of Gaunt as their duke was put down to his desire to have the field to himself at home. He disapproved, too, of the proposed French marriage and peace, and the negotiations were carried through by others, though he was present, willingly or unwillingly, at the marriage festivities in 1396, near Calais. In the early months of 1397, mutual provocations followed sinfully upon one another. It was alleged by the French writers, favorable to Richard, that Gloucester, Arundell and Warwick engaged in a conspiracy which aimed in the perpetual imprisonment of the King and his two elder uncles. But Richard himself did not attempt to bring home to them any such definite charge, and every thing points to his having resolved upon their destruction and taking them by surprise. He had at first intended to arrest them at a dinner, to which they were invited, but Gloucester, excused himself on the plea of illness. On the evening of the arrest of Warwick and Arundell, Richard accompanied, by the London trained band, set off for Gloucester who was perhaps really ill. Gloucester at the head of a solemn procession of priests and clerks of his newly founded college. As Gloucester, bent in obedience, Richard, with his own hand, arrested him, and leading the procession to the chapel assured his uncle that all would turn out for the best. After breakfast, Richard set off with most of his followers, leaving Gloucester in charge of the Earl of Kent and Sir Thomas Percy, who conveyed him direct to Calais. At Calais, Gloucester was in the keeping of its captain, the Earl of Nottingham, a prominent partisan of the King. Gloucester was thus shut off from the world under the order of his nephew, King Richard II. The King here sacrificed for his own selfish purposes one who had been a guardian in his youth and one devoted his energies to guide him in the affairs of his government. The world has never known by what means he perished. In the first parliament of Henry IV a certain John Halle, a former servant of Nottingham, swore that Gloucester, under orders from the King, had been smothered beneath a feather bed in the year 1397, in a house in Calais, called the Prince's Inn, by William Serle, a servant of Richard's chamber and several esquires and valets of the Earl of Nottingham and Rutland. Halle, who kept the door, was executed, and though he was not publicly examined, there seems to be no doubt that the main features of his story are true. Serle, falling into the hands of Henry, in 1404, suffered the same fate. VI.—Isabella, m. Ingelram de Couci, Earl of Bedford. VII.—Joan, m. Alphonso, King of Castile. In 1430 he was made Constable of France and Governor of Paris, and was Lieutenant-General of Normandy until 1432. After the death of his mother he became Duke of Buckingham. This title was borne, during the war of the roses, by the noble family of Stafford. It descended to Humphrey through his mother who was daughter of the Duke of Gloucester, who was the youngest son of Edward the III. He inherited a number of large estates and became the owner of real estate in all sections of the country. He was ambitious in elevating his position as Duke and was jealous of any interference. He was prompt in securing recognition and full recompense for his services. He was killed at the battle of Northampton, July 10, 1460. In the battle of St. Albans, 1455, in which was shed the first blood in that domestic quarrel of thirty years' continuance, which required twelve pitched battles before it was brought to a close, cost the lives of eighty princes and almost annihilated the ancient nobility of England, was slain Humphrey, Earl of Stafford, eldest son of Humphrey, Duke of Buckingham. He was for a time estranged from Queen Margaret for the dismissal of his step brothers from their offices. But on the whole, his sympathies were with the royal parties. He had ideas of holding the balance of power between Margaret and the Duke of York. Humphrey was perhaps the greatest landholder in England. His estates lay all over central England from Holderness to Breeknoe, and from Stafford to Tunbridge.

THE NEVILLES. Ralph Neville was son of Ralph Neville, third Baron of Raby, who d. 1331, and Eupherma de Clavering, dau. of John of Warkworth in Northumberland, Western Essex. Neville was a man of energy and King Edward kept him busily employed. He was socially and warmly attached to Lord Henry Percy. He advanced wool from his Yorkshire estates to furnish the King money, for which he was rewarded by many privileges. When David Bruce invaded England, in 1346, he and his eldest son joined William la Zouche, Archbishop of York, and shared in the victory of Neville's cross. After this the rest of his life was almost entirely spent on the frontiers. He d. in 1367. Neville m. Alice Audley, dau. of Sir Hugh. She survived him and m. John Neville's brother Alexander, was consecrated Archbishop of York at Westminster, June 4, 1374. His brother William was constable of Nottingham Castle. Neville was a friend of Wickliffe and one of the chiefest of his supporters, the Lollards. John was twice married: first, to Maud Percy, the dau. of Lord Henry Percy; and, secondly, to Elizabeth, the only dau. of William, Lord Latimer. He d. at Newcastle-on-Tyne, Oct. 17, 1388. In his will he was liberal in his donation to his employees and beneficent to the church.

During his early years he proved himself to be a true and loyal knight, serving faithfully in all positions in which he was placed. He was closely associated with John of Gaunt at the siege of Brest. When scandals relating to Lancaster abounded, Neville did not escape the storm of national indignation which broke over the court in 1376. The wrath of the parliament was in the first place directed against Richard Lyons and William Latimer, whose seat was at Danby in Cleveland. He was a Yorkshire neighbor of Neville, who was to take Latimer's dau. for his second wife. Latimer induced Neville to use threatening language to the Commons on his behalf, but he was impeached in three courts for buying up the King's debts, like Latimer; for suffering the troops to plunder and outrage at Southampton in 1372; and for causing the loss of several Breton fortresses by neglecting to supply the full force of men he had undertaken to furnish. Against the two latter charges he defended himself with some force. On the first count, two accusations were brought against him, one of which the complainant attempted to withdraw at the last moment. It looks as if he had been tampered with by the accused or his friends. In 1378, he was sent as the King's lieutenant to Aquitaine, to treat with the King of Arragon, and was ordered to send a force to aid the King of Navarre, against Henry of Castile, whose throne was claimed by John of Gaunt. He is credited with having recovered eighty-three towns, castles, and forts during his lieutenancy. During the remaining years of his life he was constantly employed on the Scottish border as warden. His last days were embittered by the misfortunes of his brother, Archbishop Alexander, who, in 1387, was driven from his See and country. As late as March 20, 1388, he was placed in commission to treat for peace with Scotland.

SIXTH BARON NEVILLE. Ralph Neville, sixth Baron Neville and first Earl of Westmoreland, eldest son of Raby and Maud Percy, dau. of Henry Percy, who d. in 1352. In 1380, in his sixteenth year, he entered the service, in the French expedition under the King's uncle, Thomas of Woodstock, Earl of Buckingham, afterwards Duke of Gloucester, who knighted him. In 1384 he was associated with his father in receiving the last instalments of David Bruce's ransom. In 1385 he was appointed joint governor of Castile, with the eldest son of Lord Clifford. On the death of his father in 1388, at the age of twenty-four, he became Baron of Raby. On the 24th of May, 1389, he was made warden of the royal forests north of Trent. The following year he was employed in negotiations with Scotland.

Neville's power was great in the north country where he, as Lord Raby and Brancepath in the bishopric of Durham and Middleham, and Sheriff Hutton in Yorkshire, was fully the equal, simple baron though he was, of his cousin, the head of the Percies. His support was therefore worth securing by King Richard when, in 1397, he took his revenge upon the Duke of Gloucester and other lords. The Lord of Raby was already closely connected with the crown and the court partly by marriages and alliances. He had secured for his eldest son, John, the hand of Elizabeth, dau. of the King's step-brother, Thomas Holland, Earl of Kent, who was deep in Richard's counsels, and he himself had taken for his second wife, Joan Beaufort, dau. of John of Gaunt, the King's uncle. In the distribution of rewards among the King's supporters, on Sept. 29, 1397, Neville was made Earl of Westmoreland. When Richard drove his brother-in-law Henry, Earl of Derby, out of the realm, and refused him possession of the Lancaster estates, on John of Gaunt's death, Westmoreland took sides against the King, and was one of the first to join Henry when he landed in Yorkshire in July, 1399. He and his relative, Northumberland, who had joined Henry at the same time, represented the superior lords temporal in the parliamentary deputation, while on Sept. 29, 1399, received in the tower, Richard's renunciation of the crown. The next day Westmoreland was granted for life the office of Marshal of England, which had been held by the banished Duke of Norfolk. When Henry IV was crowned on the 13th of October, Westmoreland bore the small sceptre, his younger half brother, John Lord Latimer, who at the time was a minor, carried the sceptre royal. The garter vacated by the death of Edmund, Duke of York, in August, 1402, was bestowed on Westmoreland. During the following year the Percies revolted and Westmoreland found an opportunity of weakening the great rival house in the north. One of Hotspur's grievances was the transference of his captaincy of the Roxbury Castle to Westmoreland in 1402. The day after the battle of Shrewsbury, in which Hotspur was slain, Henry wrote to Westmoreland and other Yorkshire chiefs, charging them to levy troops and intercept the Earl of Northumberland, who was marching from the north, Westmoreland drove the old Earl back to Warkworth and sent an urgent message to Henry, advising him to come into the north, where reports of his death were being circulated by the Percies. The King came and three days later transferred the wardenship which Northumberland had held since 1399, to Westmoreland. On his return south, Henry directed Westmoreland and his brother, Lord Furnival, to secure the surrender of the Percy castles. Soon after Northumberland was pardoned by the King and reconciled to Westmoreland. Westmoreland and Somerset were the only two Earls in the council of twenty-two whom, the King was induced, by the urgency of the Commons, to designate in parliament as his regular advisors.

Northumberland's reconciliation was not sincere. In 1405 he was again in revolt and remembering how his plans had failed and how he had been foiled by Westmoreland, two years before, he began with an attempt to get his cousin into his power by surprise. Westmoreland happened to be staying in a castle belonging to Sir Ralph Eure when it was suddenly beset one night by Northumberland at the head of four hundred men. But Westmoreland had received timely warning and was already flown. The flame of rebellion broke out in three different points. Northumberland was moving from the north to effect a junction with Sir John Fauconberg and other Cleveland connections of the Percies and Mowbrays who were in arms, and with youthful Thomas Mowbray, Earl Marshal and Archbishop Scrope, who raised a large force in York and advanced northward. One of Mowbray's grievances was that the office of Marshal of England had been given to Westmoreland and that he therefore had an additional spur to prompt action against the threatening combination. Taking with him the young Prince John, he threw himself between the two main bodies of rebels and routed the Cleveland force and intercepted the Archbishop and Mowbray little more than five miles north of York. Westmoreland finding himself the weaker in numbers had to recourse to strategem.

Explanations were exchanged between the two camps and Westmoreland expressing approval of the articles of grievance submitted to him by Scrope, invited the Archbishop and Earl Marshal to a personal conference. They met with equal retinues between the two camps. Westmoreland declared their demands most reasonable and promised to use his influence with the King. They there joyfully shook hands over the understanding. The unsuspecting archbishop was now easily induced to dismiss his followers with the cheerful news. As soon as they were dispersed Westmoreland laid hands upon Scrope and Mowbray and soon after handed them to the King, under whose order they were executed. The crisis over, Westmoreland returned to his employment, associating with him his eldest son, John, and during the rest of the reign was constantly engaged on the frontiers. He had made himself one of the great props of his brother-in-law's throne. Two of his brothers, Lord Furnival, who for a time was war-treasurer, and Lord Latimer were Peers, and towards the close of the reign he began to make those fortunate marriages for his numerous family by his second marriage, which enabled the younger branch of Neville to play so decisive a part in after years. One of the earliest of these marriages was that of his dau, Catherine in 1412 to the young John Mowbray, brother of the unfortunate Earl Marshal, who had been entrusted to his guardianship by the King. Westmoreland d. Oct. 1, 1425. His wife, Catharine Swynford, widow of Sir Robert Ferrers, survived him and d. Nov. 13, 1440.

In the spring of 1256 Alan la Zouche was sent to that country and soon after appointed justice. During the barons' war he steadily adhered to the King. In 1261 he was appointed sheriff of Northamptonshire and justice of the forests of Trent. In 1267 was appointed warden of London. In 1270 he and his son Roger were wounded by Earl Warren, and d. August 16, 1270. His estate went to his son Roger.

On the 20th of August, 1346, he was made commissioner with Henry Percy and Ralph Neville for the northern Army, and took prominent part in battle at Neville's Cross. II.—Roger. III.—John, m. Margaret de Bergh, dau. of John de Bergh. Their dau. Elizabeth Zouche, m. Sir Nicholas Bowett, parents of Elizabeth Bowett, who m. Alice, de Jure Baronness St. Maur, dau. of Thomas St. Maur, Baron St. Maur sixth, and succeeding barons Zouche, are now considered to have been also de Jure Barons St. Maur. Edward la Zouche succeeded as eleventh Baron Zouche on the death of his father, George, on 30th of June, 1569. In 1586 he was one of the peers who tried Mary Queen of Scots. On 22nd of December, 1593, he was sent as envoy extraordinary to James VI of Scotland, to protest against his leniency towards persons who were known to be in league with Spain, and to inform him that Elizabeth would resist the lands of any Spanish troops in Scotland. In June, 1598, he was sent as a commercial agent to Denmark. He retired in 1600 to Guernsey, where for a few months he was persuaded to act as deputy governor. In June, 1602, he was appointed governor of Wales. Four months after, Chamberlain wrote, "Lord Zouche plays rex in Wales with both council and justices and with the poor Welshman."

Zouche was continued in the office by James I, who further gratified him with grants of land for a number of years after Salisbury's death in 1612, he was one of the commissioners to whom the treasury was entrusted. He indulged in Colonial ventures, and in 1609 he was a member of the council of the Virginia Company, and in 1617 he invested in Lord De la Warr's expedition. In 1619 he sent the pinnace "The Silver Falcon," to Virginia, and on November 3, 1620, was appointed chairman of the New England Council. He was a fearless advocate of the established church and a strong defender of its faith and bitter in his denunciation of all sets averse to its rulings. It was with such a power that the Pilgrims in coming to America in 1620 had to contend. John Dunham, one of their number, was a distant relative to Edward Zouche, and had separated from the established church. He was placed in continual fear of his relatives. He shielded himself and was concealed by his friends by assuming the name of John Goodman, which he retained until after the death of King James.

PERCY FAMILY. Henry, the first Baron of Arnwick, was b. in 1272. He was the son of Henry, the seventh baron of Percy and Eleanor, dau. of Earl of Warren. He at first sided with the barons and afterwards with the King, and d. in 1272. His grandfather, William Percy, was the sixth Baron of Percy. His wife was a dau. of Ingelram de Baliol. Henry m. Eleanor, a dau. of John Fitzalen. He was the virtual founder of the historic house of Percy, which before his time had been chiefly connected with Yorkshire. He is described as being prominent for skill in tournaments and more famous than any of his ancestors. In military affairs he took a leading part. He was present with the Prince of Wales and the subject of Wales, when Edward the first created on his son the title of Prince of Wales, which has ever since been borne by the eldest son of the sovereign of England. In parliament he was a participant in founding permanent legal institutions which have ever since been spoken of with respect. He was active in lessening public expenditure. He d. in 1315.

Henry Percy, second Baron Percy of Arnwick, b. in 1299, was elder son of Henry Percy, first Baron. He was with Thomas of Lancaster, 21st of May, 1321. He had many engagements against the Scots. In 1335 he defeated them at Redesdale and in the following year he took part in Edward's invasion of Scotland, advancing from Berwick in company with Baliol. During the same year he was with Edward III at Perth. In 1338 he was sent to besiege Dunbar. In nearly every year after he was in the field or on commission for negotiating with Edward's opponents. It was through him and his father that the Percies became the hereditary guardians of the north and the scourge of Scotland. He m. Idona Clifford, dau. of Robert, who d. 1365. Henry d. in 1352.

Henry Percy, first Earl of Northumberland, son of Henry Percy, third Baron of Arnwick, and Mary, dau. of Henry, Earl of Lancaster, was born in 1342. In 1359 he m. Margaret, dau. of Ralph Neville, fourth Baron of Raby. She had been m. to William Lord Ross of Helmsley. At the time he was married he was a leader of troops in the French war. He was knighted before 1360. In 1362 he was appointed to treat with David Bruce, he being then a warden toward Scotland. In the death of his father he succeeded to his barony. In 1369 he was ordered to proceed with Duke of Lancaster to Calais. In 1373 he bought the constablership of Melford Castle, Northumberland, of the crowns and the wardenship of the lands of the heirs of the Earl of Athol. In common with Lancaster he took up the case of Wyckliff, and when on 19th of Feb., 1377, Wyckliff was summoned before the bishops, at St. Paul's, Percy walked before him as marshal, and used violence to the people, in order to clear the way through the crowd. The bishop declared that he would have no such doings in the church. An altercation ensued. When the lady-chapel was searched, Percy demanded that Wyckliffe should be allowed to sit before his judges, saying that the more the charges were that he had to answer, the more need he had of a comfortable seat; in this the bishops and he came to high words. On that day he and Lancaster had advised the King to supersede the mayor by appointing a mayor over the city and to authorize the marshal to execute his office within the city; and this, together with their insults to the bishops, greatly excited the citizens against them. Lord Fitzwalter appeared before the common council and declared that a prisoner was detained in the marshal's house contrary to law, and warned the citizens that if they let such things pass, they would live to repent it.

The citizens took arms, broke into the marshal's office, brought out the prisoners, burnt the stocks in which he had been set, and searched every room to find the marshal. Not finding him, they rushed to the duke's palace, thinking to find him there. Percy and the Duke were dining together at the home of a certain William Ypres. They were warned of their danger by one of the duke's knights and escaped to the house of the Princess of Wales, who gave them shelter. When a day or two later Percy returned to parliament he went to Westminster attended by an armed retinue. A short time after, Percy received a formal appointment as Marshal of England.

Northumberland was magnificent in his daily life, gracious in manner, and given to courting popularity. Over a large part of England, where the feudal tie was stronger than in the south, he had almost kingly power: he kept great state, and was faithfully served by his knights and retainers. Prompt and fearless in war, he was the hero and champion of the English of the north in their almost ceaseless strife against the Scots. He probably desired good and vigorous government, and was not wholly insincere in his profession of anxiety for the public welfare. At the same time his actions were really the results of selfish motives, of ambition, jealous of the rival house of Neville, anger, pride or mortification. Though he was exceedingly crafty, his temper was violent and his policy of wisdom, proud, passionate and unstable, he was never to be relied on except when his own interests were to be served or his feelings gratified by his adherence to the cause he had adopted. No issue by second wife.

CHILDREN OF HENRY, first Earl of Northumberland, son of Henry Percy, third Baron. By his first wife: I.—Henry, called Hotspur, m. Elizabeth, dau. of Edmund fourth, Earl of March and Philippa, dau. of Lionel, son of Edward III. II.—Thomas, m. Elizabeth, dau. of David, Earl of Athol. May 20, 1364, was the eldest son of Henry Percy first, Earl of Northumberland by his wife Margaret Neville, fourth Baron Neville of Raby. When thirteen years old he was knighted by Edward III, along with the future Richard II and Henry IV, who were almost of his own age. The next year he accompanied his father, when after a siege of nine days, his father recovered Berniek Castle from the Scots. He m. Elizabeth Mortimer, dau. of Edmund, fourth Earl of March and Philippa, dau. of Lionel, son of Edward III. She was b. Feb. 12, 1371. In the summer of 1388 he and his brother Ralph made marches into Scotland and most of his active life was spent on the borders of Scotland. He was an earnest worker in the Yorkist cause and as such an enemy to Henry of Lancaster who had been elevated to the throne. Hotspur was killed by the forces of the King in July 21, 1403, at Shrewsbury. Hotspur is the last and not the least in the long roll of chivalrous figures, whose prowess fills the pages of Froissart. He had the virtues and the defects of his class and time. A doughty fighter rather than a skillful soldier, he was instilled with stormy energy, passionate, and intolerant of the shadow of slight.

CHILDREN OF HENRY PERCY, called Hotspur, son of Henry first, Earl of Northumberland. I.—Henry b. in Feb. 3, 1394, he m. Eleanor Neville, dau. of Ralph Neville, second Earl of Westmoreland. The earldom of Northumberland which had been forfeited by his grandfather was restored to him by Henry V. He d. in May, 1455, in the battle of St. Albans. II.—Elizabeth, m. John, Lord Clifford, who died in 1422, and Ralph Neville, second Earl of Westmoreland. Henry IV's father, John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, had supported Wyckliff, but he proved to be a firm adherent to the Church of Rome, and consented to that act for the punishment of heretics which was passed in 1401, and under which so much cruelty was perpetrated for two centuries. The Lancastrian dynasty, by allying itself with that church postponed their reformation for four generations. His son Henry V put down the Lollards the followers of Wycliffe with a rigorous hand.

THE WENTWORTHS. The Wentworth's Nettlestead were descended from an ancient Yorkshire family, two branches of which were settled at Wentworth Woodhouse and North Elmsall. Thomas Wentworth, the great Earl of Strafford, belonged to the Wentworth Woodhouse. He was b. April 13, 1593, and was four years the senior to Deacon John Dunham. He was the eldest son of Sir William Wentworth and Anne, dau. of Sir Robert Atkins of Gloucestershire. The Barons Wentworth and Earls of Cleveland were descended from a younger branch.

John Wentworth of North Elmsall, Yorkshire, acquired the Manor of Nettlestead, Suffolk, from his wife, Margery, who was b. 1397, and d. in 1478. She was the dau. of Sir Philip De Spenser and his wife, Elizabeth Tibot, of Robert Tibot of the Lord of the Manor of Nettlestead. Roger, the younger son of John Wentworth, who d. in 1452, had by his first wife, Henry, who d. in 1482, the ancestor of the Wentworths of Gasfield, Essex, and by his second wife, the Wentworths of Oxfordshire. Thomas served through the Duke of Suffolk's expedition into France, in 1523, and was knighted in the chapel of Roy on Oct. 31, with his cousin, Edward Seymour, afterwards Duke of Somerset. In 1527 he was a member of the household of Henry VII's sister Mary, and on Oct 17, 1528, succeeded his father Richard at Nettlestead. He was returned as knight of the shire to the "Reformation" parliament, summoned to meet on Nov. 3rd, 1530, but on Dec. 2, 1529, he was raised to the peerage as Baron Wentworth. He adopted, with apparent sincerity, Reformation principles and to his influence John Bale attributed his conversion. Some time after he took some part in the proceedings against heretics, but probably with much reluctance.

In 1530 he signed the peer's letter to the pope, requesting that Henry VIII's divorce from Catherine of Amazon might be granted, and in 1532 he attended the King on his visit to the Calais to meet Francis I. In May, 1536, he was one of the peers who tried and condemned Annie Boleyn and in December, 1539, he was sent to Calais to receive Annie of Cleves. In July, 1549, he served under the Marquis of Northampton, against the insurgents in Norfolk, and in the following October he was one of the peers who under Warwick enlisted in overthrowing Somerset. He joined the conspirators in London on the 9th, and henceforth sat as a member of the privy council. He was further rewarded by being appointed one of the six lords to attend on Edward VI, and on Feb. 2, 1550, when Warwick deprived the Catholic peers of their offices, Wentworth succeeded Arundel as Lord Chamberlain of the household. THE DUNHAM FAMILY.

“What is in a name?

That, which is a rose,

By any other name, would smell as sweet.”

—Shakespeare.

In the history of the Dunhams, the names of some of the different branches are variously spelled. The Dunhams were English and as such they were subject to change the spelling of their names. No two counties in England have the same dialect, hence the places of residence have their influence on the pronunciation and spelling of their names. Where the tones of the voice are harsh, or guttural or nasal, there is a corresponding pronunciation and spelling of names. In the change of location, families thus change the pronunciation and the spelling of their names to conform with the orthoepy in vogue where they reside. In this way we can account for the change made in the spelling of surnames.

The truth is, that our orthography was so long unsettled, that it appears by the accounts of the various times, that persons were at a loss how to write their names and have written them variously. Instances might be multiplied indefinitely, where individuals have shown themselves uncertain as to the spelling of their own names. The great poet's name appears Shakspere in the register of Stratford Church; it is Shakspeare in the body of his will, but that very instrument is endorsed "Mr. Shakspere's will." He himself has written his name in two different ways, Shakspeare and Shakspere. Mr. Colman says, the poet's name in his own country is pronounced with the first "a" short, which accounts for the mode of writing the name, and proves that the orthoepy rather than the orthography of a person's name was regarded.

As late as 1660 a Dr. Croone was at such a loss to have his name pronounced correctly, that he tried six different ways of writing it as appears by printed books: Cron, Crone, Croone, Croon and Croone; all of which appear under his own hand, as he wrote it differently at different periods of his life. As the Dunhams changed their residences to different parts of England, we find a diversity in the spelling of their surnames. Thus in Kent County, Denhams; in Devonshire, Douhams; in Norfolk, Downham; in Nottingham, Dunham and Douham; and in Dorsetshire, Dynham; all of which represent different branches of the same families, but in different localities. Sir John Dunham, of Dunham on the Trent, wrote his name both Dunham and Douham. Douham, perhaps, as to his origin and Dunham as to his residence.

Deacon John Dunham was variously called in the transfer of property. His son Thomas took the name of Donham, his son Jonathan, who settled in New Jersey, continued the name and his descendants spell their names Donham. Deacon John's grandson, Eleazer, spelled his name Donham; others of his descendants changed their names. One branch changed their surnames to Denhams. The cause of this, appears to have come through Capt. Corneilus Dunham, a mariner. When in England, he was in search of his English ancestry and being in a part of the country where the Denhams resided, he was told that his name should have been Denham and that he must be a descendant of Sir John Denham. He had prepared a copy of his coat of arms and brought it to this country. The news was broadcast that the Dunhams should write their names Denham. There was no search made, for there was no record of descent and it is probable that Sir John Denham was from the same stock from which Deacon John Dunham descended.

ORIGIN OF THE DUNHAM FAMILY.

It is immaterial which of the different names the several families adopted, and in tracing their pedigree there must be records or some subsidiary data to show a continuous descent. The great length of time and the scarcity of reliable data intervening since the first appearance of the Dunhams in England, render it a very difficult task to present a record that will be beyond criticism. This is impossible and all that can be done is to announce the facts and data discovered after a critical research in the history of the family, leaving it to the judgment of the interested parties to draw their conclusions. The information given is from the most reliable authority, and in securing this, the compiler started with the traditions of his family handed down through successive generations and with these he sought historical data to establish their correctness.

DUNHAMS. The origin of a family is not established by tradition or by any fanciful hypothesis. Both have their followers. Each seeking some facts that will strengthen them in their opinions. It is unnecessary to present any of these theories, as they are as varied as the families are numerous. All that can be done is to locate the earliest progenitor of the family, as made known in official documents, and then study the circumstances, which might lead them to settle. If the records are continuous from this early period, down to the present time, the student will be assured that his efforts have not been without reward.

The earliest record of the Donhams is that of Rychert Donham, who was b. in 1294, and at an early date settled in Devonshire. This county, on the English Channel, was in constant intercourse with the inhabitants of continental Europe. It was engaged in raising sheep and the manufacture of woolen fabrics. With these goods there was an extended trade with Spain in the fourteenth century. There was a friendly intercourse between the people. Rychert Donham may have been a Spanish adventurer. He accumulated a large fortune and bought a large landed estate in Beaminster, County Sommerset. His son Robert was b. in Devonshire, in 1318, where his family m. into English families and became loyal subjects of England, and were its ardent supporters. His sons, Geoffryde, b. 1350, and John, b. 1351, removed to Norfolkshire, and founded the town of Norwich and Great Dunham in that county. His dau., Elizabeth, b. 1345, at Beaminster, where she remained with and inherited the estate of her grandfather.

She was twice married: first, to Maltravers, and second, to Humphrey Stafford, "The Silver Hand," sheriff of Dorset and Sommersetshires. Her brother Robert, b. 1348, remained in Devonshire, where his son Gregoire, was b. in 1382, and m. Elizabeth Maryuge of Danby. His youngest son, Robert, was b. in 1430. It may have been through the marriage of his aunt Elizabeth to Humphrey Stafford that he m. Margaret, the dau. of Sir Humphrey Stafford. She was b. in 1435. Her grandfather, Edmund Stafford, was a nephew of Humphrey Stafford, "The Silver Hand."

Robert Dunham's brother John, a Devonshire Squire, in 1459, espoused the Yorkist cause against Henry VII. He made himself conspicuous in the arrest of Lord Rivers, one of the generals commanding the opposing army. The Yorkist forces were at Calais, and the King's were across the strait at Sandwich. John Dunham crossed the sea at night and arriving at Sandwich, between four and five, on a dark winter morning, soon after Christmas, seized Lord Rivers in his bed, won the town, took the best ships lying in the harbor and carried Rivers and his son across to Calais. This act led to the defeat of the royal forces July 2, 1460. CHILDREN OF ROBERT DUNHAM, b. 1430. Sir John Dunham, in 1450, in the parish of Dunham-on-the-Trent and d. at Kirklington, Nov. 9, 1524. He m., in 1471, Elizabeth Bowett, the wife of William Chaworth. She was the dau. of Nicholas Bowett and Elizabeth Zouche, residing at Ripingal, Nottinghamshire. Her sister, Margaret, had m. John Chaworth. Her mother was Elizabeth Zouche, dau. of Sir John la Zouche and Margaret de Bergh; she was a dau. of John de Bergh, who was a son of Thomas de Bergh and Lucie de Bellaqua.

Rev. Charles Neville, Canon of Lincoln, a descendant of Ralph, 1307, says John Dunham, d. Nov. 9, 1524, when his son, Sir John Dunham, was fifty years old. Rev. R. H. Whitworth, of Blidworth Vicarage, Mansfield, which is three miles north of Kirklington, states that he was for 15 years Curate of Standish Hall, in Lancashire, where Myles Standish was baptized and is familiar with the history of neighboring localities; with this knowledge reliance can be placed on the statement that Elizabeth Bowett was wife of William Chaworth, knight and the late wife of Sir John Dunham. She d. March 17, 1501-2. In a deed at Newark, March 19, 1502, the Manor of Kirklington was granted to John Dunham and Elizabeth, his wife, heir and remainder from Sir John Zouche, knight. It states that their son, John, was then twenty-eight years old. On the 17th year of Henry VIII (1502), Thomas Wode (Wood) sitting at Westminster, granted the Manor at Kirklington to John Dunham and Elizabeth, his wife, Rockby and Sutton, descized.

Thomas Grantham, Lincolnshire. KIRKLINGTON. The principal manor here was allotted to Francis, the wife of John Hazelwood, Esquire. His grandchild sold it to John More, Doctor of Physic. Another small manor here, which Sir John Dunham had bought, was allotted to Katharine, who, first, m. Ralph O'Kever, Esquire, and, afterwards, to Henry Leigh, Esquire of Rusball. His son Edward (afterward Sir Edward Leigh), sold it to Sir Edward Stanhope, who also purchased the Park of Kirklington, called Ballew Park. The small manor, together with the park, was sold by Sir Edward Stanhope, of Grimstone, to the Right Honorable the Earl of Kingston, who also sold the manor to the above named Doctor More. He left the park to his son and heir, the Right Honorable Marquis of Dorchester. Now all Kirklington (except said park), is the inheritance of John More's son and heir of John More, brother of Sir Edward More, a Scotch Baronet, nephew and heir to the Doctor, who is Sir Edward More. He had but one dau. The heirs have made a very fair park into which they have taken Hockton. CHILDREN OF SIR JOHN DUNHAM, b. 1474. I.—Katharyn, b. in 1495; m. William Talbot, in 1515. II.—Elizabeth, b. in 1496; m. Rychert Bassett and had three children: James, Anne and Thomas Bassett. III.—John, b. in 1498, m. Aug. 15, 1522, Benedict Folgamsbe, dau. of Adam Folgamsbe and Katharyn, dau. of John Leake, Southwell Dale, Derby. Benedict was b. in 1499. Sir John d. in 1545. IV.—Margaret. V.—Anne, was fourth, 1502. Sir John Dunham was one of 200 who escorted Margaret of Henry VII, through Nottingham to Scotland, to become the Queen of James VI of Scotland. Coll. Topographica Genealogia states: "Sir John Dunham, 13th Henry VIII (1522), gives land to Henry Folgambe land in Skepton and elsewhere for 61 years. Benedict Dunham on 15th Henry VIII (1524), gives a manor in Wildthorpe and in other places to Benedict Folgamsbe, the godmother at her marriage. Her godfather was Thomas Folgamsbe. At their marriage they were presented with £500."

TALBOT. Katharyn Dunham, b. 1495, m. William Talbot in 1515. Issue: Jean Talbot, b. 1517, m. Francis Drake, in 1538, had ten children, among whom was SIR FRANCIS DRAKE, b. in 1539. Note. Sir Francis Drake and Martin Frobisher were the most renowned sailors of Europe, who under Lord Howard, with only thirty small rigged ships resisted and conquered the Invincible Armada of Spain, in 1568, while a small squadron, consisting of forty vessels, English and Flemish, commanded by Lord Seymour, lay off Dunkirk to intercept the opposing force. All the Protestant powers of Europe regarded the enterprise as the critical period which was to decide for ever the fate of their religion. William Bergh, b. 1536, in Devonshire, a navigator and author, in 1587, under Sir Francis Drake, destroyed 100 vessels at Cadiz. His brother, Stephen Bergh, was a navigator and discoverer. In 1583 he first named North Cape.

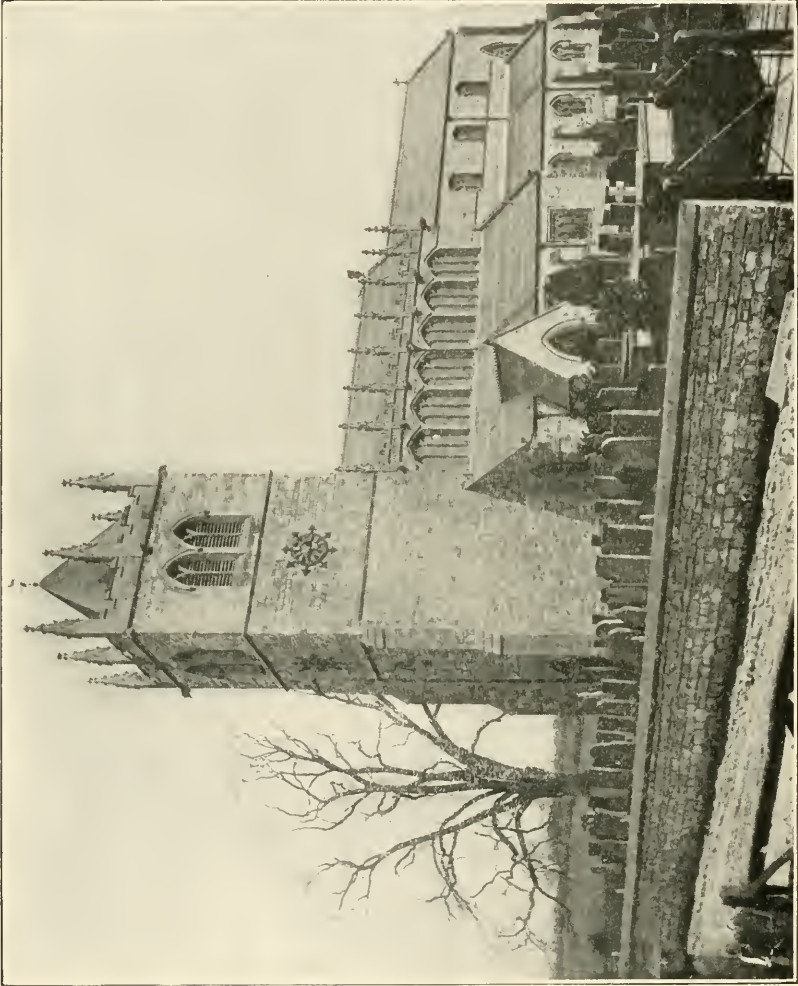

CHILDREN OF SIR JOHN DUNHAM, 1498. Ralph Dunham, b. in Scrooby, about 1526, m. Elizabeth Wentworth, a dau. of Sir Thomas Wentworth, whose father Richard was knighted at the battle of Spurs. Her mother was Margaret Fortescue and a granddaughter of Adam Fortescue and Margaret Montague; her mother was a half sister to Elizabeth Fortescue, who m. Thomas Bromley. Sir Thomas Wentworth, in 1529, was styled the "Knight of the Reformation;" in 1550 he was granted the manor of Hocking and Stepney. He then resided in Scrooby, where his dau. Elizabeth was m. to Ralph Dunham in or about 1556. Issue: I.—Thomas was b. about 1560. There is no record of his marriage. His son, John, was b. in Scrooby, in 1589; and his son, Robert, in London in 1605. Thomas Dunham, being imbued with the religious instructions of his mother, was inclined to side with the Reformers. At this time the Anglican Reformation was at its height against the Puritans and Catholics, while the Catholics were ex-communicated from England by the Reformers, the Puritans, who were compelled to act secretly, gained constantly in power. In the neighborhood of Scrooby the power of the Reformers was very powerful. Thomas felt it to such a degree, that he was ultimately compelled to remove to London where his son Robert was b. in 1605. It may be that this is the reason that much of the history of his family is obscure. Even in London, the spirit of persecution was followed up as late as 1635, for this year Robert was transported for his religious sentiment to Virginia. Thomas d. in London, and Robert, in 1635, was transported to Virginia, where he may have d. as their appears to be no record of his descendants in that colony.

HOLLENS EMIGRANTS TO AMERICA, Aug. 21. 1635. "The Names of those persons who are to be transported to Virginia imbarqued in the George Jo Severne, Mr bound thither for examination of the minister of Gravesend, etc." Robert Dunham 30 years of age; Alice Watson 30 years of age; Mary de Beusen 18 years of age; Ann White 17 years of age; Thomas Rogers 16 years of age; Theo. White 16 years of age; touching their conformity in religion.

The Dunhams and collateral branches of the family were ardent supporters of the Established Church and bitter opponents of the Puritans. Sir John Zouche, from whom Sir John Dunham was a descendant, was of this class. Sir Edmund Zouche, Counsellor of King James I, was a violent persecutor of the Dissenters.

Edmund Zouche was a contemporary of Deacon John Dunham. He was b. in 1586, and consequently of the same age with that of Deacon John Dunham. They were both of the same degree of descent from Lord John Zouche. Edmund Zouche was an ardent supporter of the Established Church, while Thomas Dunham was a strong advocate of the Puritan religion. In 1586, Edmund Zouche was one of the Peers who tried Mary, Queen of Scots. In 1602 he was President of Wales. In 1609 he was a member of the council of the Virginia Company. Thomas West, the son of Thomas West, who m. Annie, dau. of Thomas Kuyvellys, the 12th Baron de la Warre, a member of Elizabeth Privy Council, was also a member of the Virginia Company. On the 28th of February, West was appointed Governor of Virginia for life. In March he sailed for Virginia with 150 emigrants. He arrived on the 10th of June, just in time to prevent dispersion of the struggling colony. He was appointed by the council and sent out two expeditions for food. In July he impressed the English government of the need of liberal support for the colonists and of care in their selection. In 1611 he gave a flattering report of the colony. In 1617 he was taken sick and died in Virginia in 1618. He was the founder of Virginia. When he was taken sick in 1617 Edmund Zouche invested 100 lbs. on account of Lord de la Warre's expedition. In 1619 he sent his pinnace, the "Silver Falcon," to Virginia. In 1620 under the "Great Patent of New England," the King, on the third of November in the 18th year of his reign, appointed Edmund Lord Zouche, commissioner for settling New England.

When John Dunham escaped to Holland in 1608, his brother Robert was five years of age. What became of Robert is not known. During the life of Elder Brewster he continued, while in America, his love for and care of his protegee, John Dunham. By his advice, the name of John Goodman was given to John Dunham. Among the leading men of the colony we find John Goodman and Elder Brewster, their village lots adjacent. This John Goodman was no other than John Dunham. As soon as advisable, John Dunham, was made deacon under him. It was through the influence of Elder Brewster that William Bradford was created the successor of Governor Carver.

In consequence of the cloak thrown over John Dunham by his friends to protect and preserve him, his posterity have been somewhat diverted from the study of his origin and blinded as to the time of his immigrating to Plymouth. The discrepancies made by historians, their ignorance of his origin and associating his name with that of John Goodman in some transactions, have tended to confuse them in their researches. Deacon John Dunham was b. in Scrooby, England, in 1589. He m. Abigail Wood. She is supposed to be descended from Robert Wood, who m. Alison Dunham, widow of John Dunham. Her brother John Wood owned property in Plymouth adjoining that of Deacon John Dunham's. According to early records of Plymouth Colony, Deacon John Dunham "d. about fourscore years, on the second of March, 1668-9, John Dunham, Elder. He was an approved servant of God and a useful man in his place, being a deacon in the church at Plymouth." His will was made Jan. 25, 1668-9. In the same year his wife Abigail appears for letters of administration. Thomas Cushman and John Cotton, witnesses. Inventory was taken by Thomas Cushman. In his will he mentions his oldest son, John, two of the youngest sons, Benajah and Daniel, and his daughters, Abigail and Persis.

SCROOBY IN NOTTINGHAM. While there is a large amount of local and general history in the battle fought by the Americans at the battle of Lexington on the 19th of April, 1775, there is a corresponding interest in England in the struggle of settlers from Scrooby, a colony, hailing from the historic village of Lexington in the County of Nottingham, known more particularly as Laxton. To this day the earthworks and foundations of the demesnes of the Everinghams and the other great lords of Laxton. King John was very much attached to Laxton; he conferred on his favorite "Raufe the son of Steven, and to his wyffe," a charter conferring on him and his heirs the right to have all the fallen wood and permission to, have "hounds and dogs to hunt the hart, the ffox, the catt or the squirrell" in the forest of Sherwood. The last of the great family of De Caux, of Laxton, was a single woman who d. a century and a half ago. For many years before her death she gleaned on the broad fields that had once been the land of her ancestors.

A collateral branch was De Roos. Humphrey De Roos about the end of the 15th century m. Margaret Lyne, of Northampton. Margaret had a good estate made over to trustees for her use, it was good and lawful estate, in fee simple, containing many acres adjoining Laxton. The trustees of this estate were Sir John Dunham, Sir Edward Fielding, Sir John Dixby and William Roos. As the manor of Laxton was held of the King in Chief, it implies that all connected with these arrangements must have been persons of considerable position. A remark which applies to Sir John Dunham, who d. in 1545, there is positive information that another of this name d. May 9, 1525, having long enjoyed the manor of Kirklington. His property in Kirklington, Hockerton Edinglary, consisted of 30 messuages, 7 cottages, 500 acres of land, 200 acres of meadow, 40 acres of wood and rents. The reversion of this property, after his death, was to a Sir John Dunham, and thus with regard to property of other messuages and some other 300 acres in other parts of Notte. In default of issue, to the heirs of his body, lawfully begotten, this property was to go to the right heirs wherever they might be. The first property above mentioned under the Archbishop of York, the second under Sir Edmond de Bergh, a distant relative of Elizabeth Bowett, a wife of Sir John Dunham.

Four years after the death of Sir John Dunham, May 9, 1524, his son, Sir John Dunham, was associated with his brothers-in-law, Rychart Basset, Colston Basset, John Wellingby, as trustees of an estate in law, in fee simple and other lands and tenements than those already settled to the yearly value of £93-6-8 in favor of one of the Stanhopes. The estates out of which the £93-6-8 came appear to have been constantly in litigation. The residence of the ancestors of John Dunham was in the village of Scrooby. Sir Thomas Wentworth, whose dau. m. John Dunham's grandfather, resided here. Wentworth was styled the "Knight of the Reformation." He was compelled, with reluctance, to concede to the authority of the Established Church, still he privately believed in the teachings of the Reformers, and instilled in the minds of his children the truths and principles advocated by them. His influence extended to succeeding generations, while on the other hand the Dunhams were strong adherents and supporters of the Established Church. John Dunham, when a youth, was left to adopt one of the two positions for his guidance through life.

In the village of Scrooby, William Brewster was b. in 1560, who at an early age entered the employ of the Puritan, William Davidson, Ambassador of Queen Elizabeth to Holland. After the Queen's death, Brewster returned to his native town and was made postmaster of the place. It was under his influence that the first congregation of the Pilgrims was formed. In the old manor house gradually gathered a little congregation, that hung with wrapt attention on the prayers and prophesying of William Brewster. He was educated at Cambridge and was fully imbued with Puritan theology. The congregation gathered so regularly as to require the authority and oversight of a regular pastor. Brewster would not administer the Holy Sacraments.

Not far from Scrooby, in the town of Babworth, lived a gray-haired old man, by the name of Richard Clifton, who had been the rector of the church in that place, but had embraced the Puritan sentiments; he came and was chosen pastor of the congregation that met at Brewster's house. He had such a gift of exhortation and sanctity, that he drew to him devout people from the nearest towns in the neighborhood. Rev. Richard Clifton had associated with him, Rev. John Robinson, of Yarmouth, a preacher of the Established Church, who with his friends had been harassed for non-conformity, who seeking obscurity and quiet and unmolested worship of God, found his way to Scrooby.

John Dunham, then a youth of fourteen years of age, was under these religious instructions; he accepted the truth as propounded by his pastors and placed himself under the guidance of Elder William Brewster. There is no evidence of his having acquired much of a scholastic education; he was firm in his convictions, and became earnest in his devotion to his church duties. When the church decided to remove to Holland, in 1607, when he was eighteen years old, he gave himself unreluctantly to the direction of his church officials. They fully understood the antipathy of many of his relatives, who were high officials of the government, to the non-conformist and bestowed on him the name of "John Goodman," in order that he might be shielded and protected from their search and pursuit. He thus took the assumed name and for a few years after his arrival in America he was recognized by that name.

THE SCROOBY CONGREGATION. During the latter part of the reign of Elizabeth, a spirit of discontent prevailed among the people, in matters pertaining to religious ceremonies and other observances in the counties of Nottingham, York and Lincoln. In the little village of Scrooby, located at the intersection of these counties on the Idle river, was discussed the primitive or apostolic worship and purity in religion. These earnest thinkers were the originators of the Pilgrim church. Here in the old manor house gradually gathered a little congregation that hung with wrapt attention on the prayers and prophesying of William Brewster. The congregation gathered so regularly as to require the authority and oversight of a regular pastor. Brewster would not administer the Holy Sacrament. Not far from Scrooby in the town of Babworth lived a gray-haired old man by the name of Richard Clifton, who had been the rector of a church in that place, but had embraced Puritan sentiments. He came and was chosen pastor of the congregation, that met at Brewster's house; such was his gift of exhortation and sanctity, that he drew to him devout people from many towns in the neighborhood. The young men were eager to learn the truth as he expounded it and through the tender care of their leader, William Brewster, were converted and became earnest Christians and fearless advocates of the cause which they had espoused. Prominent among these youth, William Bradford, afterwards Governor of Plymouth Colony; at this time he was a youth of fourteen years of age. He came from Ansterfield, a neighboring town, in Lincolnshire. His father d. when he was only two years old. He was left in charge of two uncles. The sermons of Clifton made an indelible impression on his soul. His uncles vainly opposed the course he was taking. He was only eighteen years of age when the Pilgrims made their first attempt to emigrate to Holland. He sought to avoid the vigilance of his uncles in making his escape. He was betrayed and thrown into prison. He, however, evaded the officers and was successful, in 1608, in sailing, with his associates, to Holland. A special Providence lead him on as a stay and guide to that band which laid the foundation of a mighty empire. In the same congregation was John Dunham, another youth, who from his earliest youth, had been under the influence and guidance of William Brewster, who was the postmaster of Scrooby until the removal of the congregation to Holland. Brewster was b. in 1560 and d. at Plymouth, April 16, 1644. He had been in the service of Puritan William Davison, Ambassador to the Netherlands, under Queen Elizabeth. After her death, Brewster returned to Scrooby and gave much of his time to religious matters. Being deeply interested in the subject and possessing deep convictions through his daily life and conduct he became a power over his associates. The youth were closely drawn to him and confided in his judgment. By him was John Dunham's religious character moulded; by him was he guided in his removing to Holland and New England. The high character of his family, many whom were bitter enemies of Dissenter, demanded extreme measures by his friends in the congregation to shield him from his pursuers. During the time of James I reigned, he bore the name of John Goodman, under this name he was known in Holland and for a few years in New England. He sailed in the Mayflower and landed at Plymouth in Dec. 22, 1620. In the spring of 1621, his name is dropped and historians state that he was among those who had d. during the winter. This is a mistake; he did not die at that time, for the same historians state, he in the distribution of lots afterwards, was given a lot next to that of his old teacher and guide, Elder William Brewster." It is stated it was allotted to John Goodman," but he is designated as among the dead in 1621. This, alone, is convincing that there was no settler at that time by the name of Goodman, nor does his name appear afterwards as among the early settlers. But the name of John Dunham does appear among the prominent men and as being in the service of the colony for many years. In the sale of cattle historians inform us that his were demoninated "Goodman's Steers." Again he is frequently called by them Goodman Dunham. We see that the name Goodman in the early days of the colony associated with that of Dunham. Why? The history of John Dunham's family explains this. Most of his kinsmen belonged to the Established Church and were bitterly opposed to the dissenters. So that John Dunham would suffer should they be able to detect and arrest him, inasmuch as they were high in the administration of the government. Even Sir Edmund Zouche was chairman of the commission to settle Virginia and New England Colonies was distantly connected with his family. Measures were taken to shield John Dunham from the officers, who were in pursuit of him. For this purpose he was given or he assumed the name of "John Goodman." The new colony of Plymouth was under the surveillance of the English commission. So that all the acts of the early settlers were known to the board. The Pilgrims feared the British power, and were careful in not antagonizing them. Hence the name adapted by John Dunham in escaping to Holland was continued on the arrival of the Pilgrims at Plymouth, Massachusetts. If, perchance, his pursuers believed that he was John Goodman, whom the records at the earliest date report dead, search would cease. It is supposed that he continued the use of the name John Goodman up to the death of James I in 1625. This is the reason why the early historians in speaking of John Dunham, use the name of John Goodman," supposing that he would permanently adopt it. This he did not do, for as soon as the colony was duly organized we find him in 1632 purchasing in his name real estate, and in 1633 he became a freeman. Upon the formation of a permanent government, in 1639, he was then elected deputy of Plymouth colony, which office he held for 21 years. He continued an active member of the church, and was elected in 1633, deacon under Elder Brewster, which position he afterwards held, during the rest of his life. Some historians not being able to ascertain the date of John Dunham's arrival into Plymouth, give it 1633, the year in which he became a freeman. He had been in the country since 1620. But in 1633 he then felt assured of his safety and openly made known his identity.

John Dunham was a descendant of Thomas Wentworth known as the "Knight of the Reformation," and his own family were friends of the dissenters. After the removal of John Dunham, Thomas Dunham, his father, removed to London, from which his son, Robert, in 1635, was transported in the ship "George" to Virginia, for his religious wandering. When John Dunham escaped to Holland, in 1608, his brother Robert was five years of age. What became of Robert is not known. During the life of Elder Brewster he continued, while in America, his love for and care of his protegee, John Dunham. By his advice, the name John Goodman was given to John Dunham. Among the leading men of the colony we find John Goodman and Elder Brewster own village lots adjacent. This John Goodman was no other but John Dunham. As soon as advisable, John Dunham was made deacon under him. It was through the influence of Elder Brewster, William Bradford was created the successor of Governor Carver. In consequence of the cloak thrown over John Dunham by his friends to protect and preserve him, his posterity have been diverted from the study of his origin, and blinded as to the time of his emigrating to Plymouth. The discrepancy made by historians, their ignorance of his origin and associating his name with that of John Goodman in some transaction, have tended to confuse them in their researches.

"THE REFORMATION IN ENGLAND." The struggle between the old and new religion lasted long and raged fearfully in England and Scotland, and continued uninterruptedly, even down to the end of the 17th century, for Puritanism was a second Reformation; but it left, in the end, a very strong impression upon the character of the nation and affected deeply its political and social institutions. In theology the English Protestants depended upon the ideas and principles of Calvin, and displayed great practical energy and power of organization. From the start it was a political as well as a religious movement, and hence afforded a wide scope to the corrupting influence of selfish ambition, and violent passion. In the English reformation we may distinguish them.

DURING THE REIGN OF HENRY VIII, 1527 to 1547. Abolition of the Authority of the Pope. This was merely a negative and destructive process, which removed the outward obstructions and prepared the way for reform. Henry VIII quarreled with the Pope, not religiously or theologically, but purely on personal and selfish grounds, because the Pope properly refused his consent to his divorce from Catharine of Aragon and his marriage to Annie Boleyn. "The defender of the faith"—a title given to him by the Pope, for the defence of the seven sacraments against Luther—remained in the doctrine, and religious sentiment, a Roman Catholic to the end of his life, and at his death the so-called bloody articles" which enjoined under the severest penalties the dogma of transubstantiation, auricular confession, private masses and the celibacy of the priesthood were yet in full bloom. The only point of real difference was the royal supremacy. He simply substituted a domestic for a foreign and political for an ecclesiastical papacy, and punished with cruel severity Protestant as well as Roman Catholic dissenters, who dared to doubt his supreme leadership of the Church of England. While he thus destroyed the power of the Pope, and monasticism in England, a far deeper and more important movement went on among the people under the influence of the revived traditions of Wycliffe and the Lollards, the writings of the continental reformers and the English version of the scriptures commenced by Tyndale, carried on by Coverdale and revised by Cranmer. Soon after the commencement of the reformation in England, in the year 1534, the Protestants were divided into two parties, one the followers of Luther, and the other of Calvin. The former had chosen gradually, and almost imperceptibly, to recede from the Church of Rome, while the latter, more zealous and convinced of the importance of a thorough reformation, and at same time possessing much firmness and high notions of religious liberty, were for effecting a thorough change at once. What the others had done in the reformation fell far short of their wishes. They still saw surplices, printed prayers, organs, bishops, and altars with most of the pomp, which had belonged to the papal churches and were but little impressed with the alterations of doctrines and creeds.

DURING THE REIGN OF EDWARD VI, 1547 to 1553, the positive introduction of the reformation was made by the co-operation, mainly of the Duke of Somerset, protector and regent during the King's minority, and by Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, who by his public subserviency to King Henry, had preserved the idea and hope of a reformation through the reign of terror. Cranmer was assisted in the work by Ridley and Latimer, and by several reformed diviners from the continent, whom he called to England. Calvin's advice was solicited by Somerset. The most important work during Edward's reign, and in fact of the whole reformation, next to the English version of the Bible, was the 42 articles of religion, subsequently reduced to 35, or a new and Calvinistic confession, and the book of Common Prayer," or a new directory of worship in the vernacular tongue, on the basis of the ancient Latin service, but with essential changes. These two standards of public doctrine and public worship have retained a remarkable hold upon the English nation.

DURING REIGN OF MARY, 1553 to 1558, an attempt to undo the reformation and restore the Roman Catholic religion and the authority of the Pope was made by Mary and her friend, Cardinal Pole, who, after the deposition of Cranmer, was made Archbishop of Canterbury. This Catholic interim did more to consolidate the reformation in England than Henry and Edward. Hundreds of martyrs fertilized the Protestant soil in this short reign, among them the three British Reforms, Cranmer, Ridley and Latimer, who were publicly burned at Oxford in 1556. Many others fled to the continent, especially to Geneva, Zurich and Frankfort-on-the-Main, where they were hospitably received and brought into closer contact with the Reformed churches of Switzerland and Germany.

REIGN OF ELIZABETH, 1558 to 1603. The restoration and permanent establishment of the English Reformation. The Roman Catholic hierarchy was replaced by a Protestant and the articles of religion and the Common Prayer book of the reign of Edward were introduced again after having been submitted to a revision. The ecclesiastical supremacy of the crown was likewise renewed but under a modified form, the Queen refusing the title, "Supreme Head" of the Church of England and choosing in its place the less objectionable title, "Supreme Governor." The convocation and parliament readily sanctioned all these changes, but the English Church, as established by Elizabeth, was semi-Catholic in its form of prelatical government and liturgical worship, a sort of via media between Rome and Geneva. It suited the policy of the court and the taste of the majority of the English people, but was offensive to the severe school of strict Calvinists, who had returned from their continental exile. Hence the agitation in the bosom of the Reformed Church of England and the growing conflict between the Episcopalian majority and the Puritan minority. Elizabeth's reign was equally intolerant against Puritan as against papal dissenters and passed the severest penalties against them. But while the Catholics was almost annihilated in England, the Puritan party grew more powerful under the successors of Elizabeth and succeeded in overthrowing the Episcopalian establishment, although it revived the shock. These troubles and agitations constitute the last stage in the history of the English reformation which, in some respects is the most important and interesting, but lies beyond the reformation.

THE PURITANS. The early settlers of New England. In the reformation of the English church this class still saw surplices, printed prayers, organs, bishops, and altars, with most of the pomp which had belonged to the papal church, and were but little improved with the alterations, doctrines and creeds. Their plainness of dress, their gravity of deportment, the names of their children, borrowed from the scriptures, their daily religious conversation, their endeavors to expunge from the church all the inventions of men, and to introduce the "Scripture purity" acquired for them the name of Puritans. The reason assigned for leaving their own country and settling a wilderness were, that the ancient faith and true worship might be found inseparable companions in their practice, and that their posterity might be undefiled in religion.

SEPARATISTS. In the year 1602, a number of people in the counties of Nottinghamshire, Lancashire and Yorkshire, by the preaching of the gospel became savingly acquainted with the truth. Their ignorance, prejudices, and errors were so far removed, that they saw the vanity of their superstitions and sought more evangelical instructions, and a purer church. A separation from the established church was the natural consequence, shaking off their anti-Christian chains, they resolved, whatever it should cost them to enjoy liberty of conscience on account of their distance from each other, they formed themselves into two churches: of one, Mr. John Smith a man of able gifts and a good preacher, became pastor, but these, adopting some error, became neglected and their history is unknown.

"THE PILGRIM FATHERS." The Pilgrim Fathers were mostly residents of the agricultural villages of Austerfield in Lincolnshire, Scrooby in Nottinghamshire and Bawtry in Yorkshire. The population occupied a happy medium between poverty and riches, but contained the elements for creating a mighty empire. They were a class of sturdy farmers with their families, who worked through the week and worshipped God, in neat attire when the Sabbath came. Away from court influence, away from the town with its luxuries or its destitutions, they dwelt among the cornfields, the shops and kine, they read little, saved something from their hard earnings and thought somewhat of God and futurity. The English Church had been established, and conformity with rights of worship was required by the Act of Parliament, and non-conformity was punished with fines and imprisonment. Wealth, rank, station and respectability were in the Established Church; the throne and the aristocracy next formally allied with prelacy and they pressed down with a weight that either crushed non-conformity or ground it to the earth.

The class which constituted the middle stratum of life, was made up mainly of the Anglo-Saxon element, there was a great number who desired a more ascetic religion and more morality than was to be found in the Established Church. Those who kept the Sabbath and prayed without reciting from the Prayer Book, but wrestled with God in secret prayer, were called Puritans. The Pilgrim Fathers, while adhering to the teachings of the Puritans, strove for a separation of church and state and were designated as Separatists. The Pilgrims were not Puritans. It is said, that, in the vestibule of the House of Lords hangs a picture of "The Sailing of the Mayflower," which was formerly entitled "Departure of a Puritan Family for New England," the Commissioners on Decoration of the House after investigation changed the words "Puritan Family" to "Pilgrim Fathers." These Separatists had no visible organization, they sought safety in obscurity, a fitting tribute to the Pilgrim Father, Deacon John Dunham.

THE DEPARTURE FOR HOLLAND. The old Manor house did not conceal the congregation very long or shield its members from the tender mercies of the bishops and the officials of the Ecclesiastical Courts. They were fined, imprisoned and worried, until they finally resolved on a removal to Holland. They went in separate companies, first to Amsterdam; they remained there about a year and then by the advice of their pastor they finally went to Leyden. It was in 1607 that they attempted to leave England for Holland, but they were prevented by the civil officers, who kept the whole company under arrest for a month. The design was renewed and successfully carried out the next year. The aged pastor, Rev. Richard Clifton, died previous to their embarkation. A congregation of English Puritans, under the pastoral care of Rev. John Smith, had been organized at Amsterdam previous to the arrival of Robinson, but some dissension happening among them, it was dissolved. Robinson feared the effects that might arise from such an example, and so he persuaded his church to remove to Leyden.

LEYDEN, HOLLAND. The city of Leyden stands inward about fifteen miles on either side along the mouth of the Rhine River. The Rhine before it enters Leyden parts into two streams which sweep around through opposite portions of the city and reunite near its centre. From these streams the canals circulate through the city, in all directions, cutting it into innumerable islands. The houses in the city stand with their old gables looking toward the canals, with the eaves troughs projecting forward so far as to empty themselves into the water; the streets are narrow and winding, and they are kept clean by stout women and girls dashing over them endless pails of water. Rows of trees are planted along the banks of the canals. How significantly do the churches point their turrets upward above the masses of houses and how sweet is the tone of their chimes as they break out almost every hour, and thrill through the air and around the old gables and down the crooked lanes and along the lazy canal waters, sometimes sad and sometimes merry, sometimes loud and sometimes soft, keeping the whole city bathed in the atmosphere of fantastic sounds. During the year of 1611, we find the Pilgrims building within this city a building of considerable size with a tract of land around it. Within this they build a number of little tenements in which probably a majority of the congregation live, worshipping in the large parlor of their pastor's house. With four or five exceptions they appear as mechanics. It is here that we find John Dunham beginning a life of toil. He learned the trade of a weaver. He and his associates were willing to work at anything which would give them a support. Such was their reputation for honesty that any of their congregation, however poor, could obtain from the Leyden merchants.

The mechanical life was very wearing, especially upon the aged and children. As the boys grew to manhood many of them took to the sea or joined the army; those who remained at home were subjected to temptation unknown to their fathers in rural England. They looked with abhorrence on the Hollanders' liberal mode of observing the Sabbath. They saw, that if they remained in Leyden, they should ultimately disappear, melting away as a soluble element in the foreign population, instead of establishing a church, that from small beginnings should grow mighty, and invite the poor and oppressed to its sheltering bosom. This was their fondest dream, not only to establish a true church for themselves, but one that should endure and be a blessing to all posterity.

RE-EMIGRATION TO AMERICA. After a residence of eleven years a meeting of the congregation was held, at which meeting a majority of its members resolved to go to Virginia, and arrangements were accordingly made. The younger and more vigorous portion of the company, numbering about 120, were to go first; the Elder and the more infirm tarried behind and were to follow on when Providence prepared the way. John Dunham sailed with the company, but his wife was unable to accompany him, being compelled to remain with her infant son, who was born shortly before the departure for America. She quietly joined him at Plymouth as soon as she was in a condition to do so. On the 22d of July those selected, left Leyden by barge, passed through Delft into the Haven where the Speedwell lay ready to receive them; they embarked and reached Southampton where they were met by the Mayflower. The company was distributed between the two vessels. The ships started together and sailed as far as Plymouth, England. The Speedwell having proven herself unseaworthy, some of her passengers were transferred to the Mayflower; about twenty of her passengers would not re-embark. The Mayflower sailed on the 6th day of September, 1620, for Virginia. The Pilgrims bid an everlasting farewell to England, and continued on their course to Virginia, but God in his providence shaped it otherwise, since Cape Cod projected its encircling arm into the sea, and averted their course, and brought them safely into the harbor of Plymouth, December 22, 1620. Robinson remained in Leyden in charge of the remnant of his congregation. He was never permitted to come to America. The jealous eye of King James and his bishops were upon the whole enterprise watching all its movements. The officers and agents of the Virginia Company had secret and positive orders to keep Robinson separated from the Pilgrim flock. Always longing to look once more upon the faces of those so cruelly parted from him at Delft Haven, he, yet, died without the sight. He died in Leyden, March 1, 1625, being fifty years old. Not long after his death his widow and children emigrated to Plymouth, Massachusetts, where they joined their brethren who had preceded them.

ACCOUNT OF THE MAYFLOWER. On the 22d of December, the Mayflower discharged its precious load of passengers on Plymouth Rock. With what reverence do we announce the fact. We revert to the days spent in the organization of the church at Scrooby and follow the congregation to Leyden. In the eleven years spent at Leyden what wonderful changes had taken place. New accessions had taken place and prominent among them was the reception of Myles Standish into the church; he was serving his country in the army at the Netherlands and was impressed with the character of the organization and became a great power in promoting its welfare. There were many who came from England to swell the ranks of the Pilgrims. A great change had taken place in the members of the original church at Scrooby, their members had decreased, some of their children had gone astray, so that at the time of the embarkation at Leyden, there were but few of the original congregation left to emigrate to America, only Deacon John Dunham and Elder William Brewster, who were of the original congregation, natives of Scrooby. All that came by the Mayflower were not connected with the church.

The voyage was considered a hazardous undertaking and some reluctantly joined in the expedition, while others went out as servants to the leading men, so that the number of the early comers by the Mayflower, through whose influence Plymouth Colony was established, was very small. Governor Bradford preserved and published the following list of passengers who came by the Mayflower. In this list appears the name of "John Goodman;" in the spring he is reported dead. This is incorrect. That name was assumed by John Dunham as previously accounted for is a shield from his enemies. In stating that it was dropped was merely to announce that there was a John Goodman, who was not a passenger; being on English soil it was not safe to identify John Dunham. The announcement may have been to mislead his pursuers. The fact, however, remains that although dead, John Goodman is afterwards assigned a village lot. His lot is located next to that of Elder William Brewster, who is a life-long friend of Deacon John Dunham, and among the leading men of the settlement. This is improbable. Historians have tried to cover this up by asserting that they cannot account for the record. John Dunham is frequently called by them, Goodman Dunham. John Dunham held the name for a few years until after the death of King James. We find him, as late as 1638, when he offers cattle for sale, designating them as "Goodman's" cattle. The list heretofore published, was undoubtedly prepared with the purest motives, has done an injustice to a noble man who, for twenty-one years, was deputy of Plymouth Colony, and thirty-four years deacon of the church, and who had held many high positions in the gift of the people. In consequence of its publication, his descendants have seen fit to prepare a record of his ancestry, that an explanation may be given for the insertion of John Dunham's name for that of "John Goodman."

DEACON JOHN DUNHAM.

“Plymouth Colonial Records” contain the names of many remarkable men who were pillars in the upbuilding and laying the foundation of this republic. A few of them have been selected and made conspicuous in the annals of history, while others, equally worthy of the same honors, have been allowed to pass into oblivion. Not any has a more brilliant record than that of Deacon John Dunham. He sacrificed position in society, with its accompaniments, that he might devote his life to the welfare of his fellow-men. Many have attempted to give an account of his life, but have failed at the very threshold. This was due to the scarcity of records in establishing the date of his first arrival at Plymouth. This was the stepping-stone, for without it further research became discouraging. Still, a few determined kinsmen continued their investigations and have secured many valuable facts which have added much towards discovering the exact time of his arrival. To remove the uncertainty as to the time of his arrival in America and to seek information regarding his early life, his descendants have united their efforts in making a careful investigation at least, as far as existing records disclose, in order that they may form some definite idea of the principal events of his life.

The following review is now presented for the purpose of bringing to light some facts which may unravel the tangle: There was a John Dunham, born in Scrooby, a village on the Idle, a branch of the Trent River, Nottinghamshire, Eng. He left his country at an early age on account of religious persecution. His father soon after removed from Scrooby to London, taking with him his son Robert, who, for the same cause, was transported in 1630 from London in the ship George, to Virginia. It has been found to be a very difficult task to establish this John Dunham, of Scrooby, and reestablish him, as the Plymouth John Dunham, who, as a Separatist, fled from England, escaped from his pursuers by assuming the name of John Gooduan when in Holland and America.

THE SEPARATIST, OR PILGRIM, DISTRICT IN ENGLAND, lies in the valley of the Trent, and is included within a line drawn through Austerfield, Dunham-on-the-Trent, Kirklington, Bab-worth and Worksop. Scrooby, the native village of Deacon John Dunham and Elder William Brewster, was situated two miles southwest of Austerfield, the birthplace of Governor Bradford. Within this territory were the Manors of Scrooby, in which the first congregation of the Pilgrims was organized, and Southwell. These Manors were formerly placed under the charge of Edwin Sandys, Archbishop of York, by order of Queen Elizabeth.

ORGANIZATION OF THE PILGRIM CHURCH. The first congregation of the Pilgrim Church was organized through the efforts of William Brewster, in the Manor House at Scrooby, and Rev. Richard Clifton, of Babworth, was called to officiate as the first pastor. He was succeeded by Rev. John Robinson, who was pastor, and William Brewster, elder of the church, when the Pilgrims emigrated to America. William Bradford and John Dunham, while in their boyhood, were placed under the spiritual guidance of William Brewster, who was postmaster of Scrooby. Brewster was appointed to this position by Sir John Stanhope, April 1, 1594, which office he held until September, 1607. The Dunhams were for a long time owners of large tracts of land in the vicinity of Scrooby. John Dunham, Esq., a progenitor of Deacon John Dunham, inherited property at Dunham-on-the-Trent. He married Elizabeth Bowett, who had been the wife of William Chaworth. Her mother was the daughter of Sir John Zouche and through him of Bergh and De Bellaqua. By her John Dunham had a son, Sir John Dunham. She died March 17, 1501. In her will, recorded at Newark-on-the-Trent, March 10, 1502, she grants to her son, Sir John, the Kirklington Manor, as heir and remainder of Sir John Zouche.

Sept. 10, 1509, John Dunham presided over a court of inquisition at Southwell. The Manor of Colwick, was granted to John Dunham, Robert Clark and John Sutton, June 4, 1502. John Dunham subsequently sold his interest to Sir John Sutton. March 3, 1513, John Dunham was appraiser of the estate of Ralph Langston at Worksop. His son, Sir John Dunham, presided over a court of inquisition in 1528, post mortem of Robert Stanhope. Sir John Dunham's property in Kirklington and Edingley, some of which was held under the Archbishop of York, consisted of thirty messuages, seven cottages, three hundred acres of land, two hundred acres of meadow, one hundred acres of pasture, forty acres of wood, and he held in other parts of Notte, under Sir Edmund Bergh, a number of messuages, three hundred acres of land near Scrooby, and also meadow and wood land.

Sir John Dunham, Sir John Digby and William De Roos, were trustees of the estate of Margaret De Roos, relict of Humphrey De Roos, who had inherited a large tract of land in Lexington, popularly known as Laxton, in Notte. Scrooby was settled by a colony from Laxton, and our Lexington in Massachusetts was settled by natives from old Lexington; hence its name. Both places are of extreme historical interest. To this day the earthworks and foundations of the demesne of the Everinghams, and other great lords of Laxton, are carefully preserved. King John especially loved Laxton. He granted a charter for Sherwood Forest, to Kaufe De Caux, a son of Steven and Maria De Caux. The last of this great family was a single woman, who died about one hundred and fifty years ago. A collateral branch was De Roos. Humphrey De Roos having been a lawful heir, after his death his wife succeeded him in possession of the property, of which Sir John Dunham was a trustee.

PERSECUTION OF THE PILGRIMS. Upon the accession of James I, King of England, he and his bishops were determined to force the Episcopacy on his people. They commanded all those who were above the age of sixteen to regularly attend church services. In case of neglecting to do so, they were to be imprisoned. The Separatists, rather than submit, decided upon leaving the country. In this movement, William Brewster was the controlling spirit. In the fall of 1607 the Separatists made arrangements for escaping to Holland, where they could have freedom of religious worship. They were intercepted and seven of their number were put in prison. William Brewster, having been concealed by his associates, escaped. It is supposed that William Bradford and John Dunham, each then nineteen years old, were of the seven who were arrested at Boston and imprisoned, and it is firmly believed that if Governor Bradford had written the names of these prisoners in his pocket memorandum book, the name of John Dunham would be found. The Pilgrims continued their efforts and were successful in reaching Holland in 1608.

Sir Dudley Carleton was the ambassador of King James I at The Hague. While there, his orders were to watch and, if possible, bring charges against the Pilgrims. William Brewster published at Leyden a number of pamphlets of Pilgrim literature, which reflected on the Church of England. He was financially assisted by William Brewer, an English gentleman residing in Leyden, a few doors from the Rev. John Robinson's house. There being a mutual bond of friendship between King James and the States general of Holland, measures were taken to have the printing suppressed and the publishers arrested and transported to England. The States general issued an edict against the publication. William Brewer was arrested by William Zouche, who had been appointed by Ambassador Carleton for that purpose. This Zouche and John Dunham were in the same degree related to Sir John Zouche. William Brewer was taken to England, Dec. 9, 1619, and placed in prison, where he remained until the meeting of the Long Parliament. William Brewster escaped, and the next year sailed for America. The Pilgrims, in emigrating to America, desired to continue living under the Dutch rule by locating near the mouth of the Hudson River. In this they were disappointed, as they landed on the New England shore. Here they were again on English territory and under the sovereignty of King James, who was still bitter in his feelings against them, and his successor, King Charles I, followed in the same line of hostility, until it led to his own downfall. King James, however, had other interests at stake. He was engaged in making English settlements in New England. He feared making an open attack on the Pilgrims, thinking it might embarrass his enterprises. The Pilgrims were suspicious of him and were particularly solicitous about John Dunham, as his kinsmen were zealous partisans of the Established Church and leaders in the attacks of the Pilgrims. One of them, Sir Edward Zouche, was chairman of the commission engaged in settling New England. John Dunham was in a hazardous position, on account of his kinsmen, as well as being a Separatist. His identity had to be concealed. This was done by adopting the name of John Goodman, which name was continued until after the death of King James.

PASSENGERS BY THE MAYFLOWER IN 1620. In the published list of passengers by the Mayflower, in 1620, appears the name of John Goodman, who was reported to have been a single man. He, it is told, dies during the first winter. After this he is assigned one of the garden plots adjoining that of Elder William Brewster, and three years after his arrival was allotted land in the General Distribution, in 1623. Governor Bradford did not commence writing the Plymouth Annals until 1630, ten years after the arrival of the Mayflower at Plymouth. He continued the writing until 1641, that is, two years after the first organization of the General Court. At this time John Dunham was deacon of the church, having been chosen in 1633, to serve under Elder Brewster. He also held the office of deputy for the colony, for which office he was chosen on June 4, 1639, when the General Court was organized. These offices he held almost continuously the rest of his life. It was not till the year 1650 that the list of passengers brought by the Mayflower, in 1620, was made up by Governor Bradford. Some assert that it was done by Governor Prince. This is immaterial, though controversial, and at all events, pretty late for an historical record. The Pilgrims on board the Mayflower in the fall of 1620, made a solemn compact, for their mutual benefit. It is a scandalous disgrace to the officials of the Old Colony that so precious a document as the Compact could have been lost. Will any apology suffice for such negligence, since historians base all their statements on this authority? It was not until the year 1669 that Nathaniel Morton gave the names of the signers of the compact. This, one year after the death of Deacon John Dunham and twelve years after the death of Governor Bradford.

EVENTS IN THE LIFE OF DEACON JOHN DUNHAM. He was born in the village of Scrooby, in Nottinghamshire, England, in the year 1588-9. He married Abigail Wood, who was distantly related to him. He was married in Leyden, Holland, Oct. 17, 1619, and their son John was born near the time of departure of the Pilgrims for America, in 1620. The mother and child were not able and were not allowed to accompany him. She, however, secretly joined him in Plymouth. This accounts for his being recorded a single man. That he was known as one of the Old Stock is evidenced when, in 1662, his son John received a grant of land, being one of the first born in the colony. In accounting for John Goodman (John Dunham), being reported as dying during the first winter, two reasons have been suggested; either to avoid considering John Goodman as one of the first settlers, or for the purpose of concealing his identity as John Dunham. Both of these points, perhaps, were considered. We have yet to learn how Elder Brewster was protected in Holland and America. Three years after the first arrival of the first settlers, an assignment of garden plots was made to the "Married Men of the Plantation," as ordered by the ordinance of the colonists. How these lots were distributed Governor Bradford describes in his own handwriting, as follows: "The South Side of the Street:" Peter Browne, John Goodman, William Brewster. "Highway to Town Brook:" John Billington, Isaac Allerton, Francis Cooke, Edward Winslow. The lots for planting were allotted by chance. Historians state that these lots were awarded to John Goodman and others. The same authorities tell us that he had died during the first winter. At that time John Dunham was alive. It should be considered, that John Goodman, if a single man, could not hold a garden plot. Single men were obliged to live in the families of the married. John Dunham was a married man, and provision was made for his family. He was a protegee of Elder Brewster and also a native of Scrooby, and it would be natural to give them adjoining lots, as Governor Bradford reports.

A list has been published giving the names of those settlers to whom cattle were given in the distribution of 1627. It is claimed that this document gives the names of all the inhabitants of the Colony at that time. Since the publication, on investigation, it has been shown that there were other residents in 1627. Neither the name of Goodman nor Dunham appear in the list. John Dunham, soon after this date, is known to be a dealer in cattle. As early as 1632 he received a grant of land for pasturing his cattle. He may have purchased them in 1627. John Dunham was chosen deacon of the church, in 1633, under Elder Brewster. This is the year some historian says that he arrived in the country. It is not creditable that on his immediate arrival he should be chosen to such a responsible position, without a previous record. As late as 1638, cattle were sold under the name of "Goodman." During this year cattle were advertised as "Goodman's Steers." These are supposed to be the property of Deacon John Dunham. The following extract, concerning Deacon John Dunham, taken from the Records, expresses the opinion of those who in 1638 were about placing him in power as Deputy of the Colony:

"He was a man of strict honesty and sterling character, quite prominent in the growth and prosperity of the Colony." Could this be said of a man who had just arrived in the Colony, coming, as historians have stated, in 1633? The Plymouth Colonial Records in speaking of the death of Deacon John Dunham give this information: "He was an approved servant of God and useful man in his place, being a deacon in the Church of Plymouth." He carried out in the minutest detail the principles taught by his Church in extending the Kingdom of his Lord and Saviour.

PLYMOUTH COLONY. Much is due, for the success of the infant Plymouth Colony, to the industry and enterprise of Deacon John Dunham. By trade he was a weaver and plied the loom. He was also engaged in rearing cattle, and as his flocks increased, he secured additional land, from time to time, so that his estate was constantly on the increase. He became one of the first purchasers of Dartmouth. This he sold to John Briggs, six years before his death. To the newcomers, John Dunham dealt with a liberal hand in providing means for their subsistence, and he secured land for their occupancy and use.

On the 10th of April, in the 4th year of the reign of King James the 1st, the Great Patent of New England, which is the foundation of the title to the land comprised between the 40 and 48° of north latitude, was presented and granted on 3d of November, 1620. The council was formed under the leadership of Sir Edmund Zouche, Counselor of James I, to put it into execution. This council made inducements for settling the county. In 1621 it granted to John Pierce, in trust, a patent. This he sold in 1623 for £500. On the 1st of January, 1629, Gov. Bradford bought the patent in trust, but the patent was not signed until the first year of Charles I. A form of government was adopted placing the power in the hands of the governor and assistants. In 1638 this power was transferred to the house of Deputies or General Court. On the 2d of March, 1640, Gov. Wm. Bradford surrendered the patent, reserving to himself, 1st, a tract on Cape Cod, embracing Eastham, Orleans, Brewster and Chatham. 2d, Dartmouth and New Bedford. 3d, Rheoboth, Mass. Barrington, Warren and, perhaps, Bristol, R. I.

To the disconsolate, John Dunham gave words of encouragement and solaced them with kind words and deeds. He was self-sacrificing in providing for the comforts of others. This was in accordance with his general character. When about twenty days after arriving at Plymouth, he (whom some historians have named John Goodman), and Peter Brown walking into the woods, "to gather thatch" (notice the object of their expedition), "lost themselves." After wandering all the afternoon, they were obliged, though "slenderly" clothed to make the ground their bed. It snowed and the cold was severe. Their distress in the night was increased by hearing as they supposed lions roaring, one of which they thought very near. In their terror, they resolved to climb a tree, though an intolerably cold lodging place. They stood ready to ascend, when the lions should come, and continued walking, walking 'round the tree all night, which probably saved their lives. In the morning they saw the islands in Plymouth Harbor and in the evening reached their friends, fainting with hunger and cold. John Dunham's feet were so frozen that they were obliged to cut off his shoes.

John Dunham was patriotic while reverencing his native country; he loved the country of his adoption. He with Governor Bradford and Elder Brewster were the only Pilgrims who were members of the original congregation at Scrooby and they passed the whole of their lives in Plymouth, while others scattered into the wilderness beyond them. It is to be inferred that John Dunham, by purchase and land grants, had accumulated considerable property. Not only had grants been given to him, but his son John, had been the recipient of a special grant, being the first born of one of the old comers. As early as 1632, John Dunham's name appears on the day list for 9 shillings and Miles Standish 18 shillings. Although Deacon John Dunham proved himself to be a man of excellent business qualifications, his soul appeared to be rapt up in the work of the church. Up to 1639 the affairs of the church were peaceably managed. At this time John Cook caused some dissensions and confusion in the organization. John Cook was dismissed and, to appease the people, John Dunham was elected his successor. He held the position of deacon for the rest his life.

During the official life of John Dunham as one of the Deputies of the General Court of Plymouth, the history of the colony prescribes but few momentous events and the period was one of profound peace with the Indians. English settlements, incorporated as towns, were extended in every direction, and the territory was nearly covered by English grants. There were no domestic feuds or ecclesiastical controversies. Sectarians, it is true, occasionally disturbed the tranquility of the inhabitants of this little commonwealth, but persecution, with them, assumed its mildest form, and their annals have escaped that deep and indelible stain of blood which pollutes the pages of the early history of their sterner and more intolerant brethren of Massachusetts. They were somewhat apprehensive of the commissioners who were sent out by King Charles II, to examine the condition of the colonies and to correct abuses, but in Plymouth, there were no complaints, because apparently there were no wrongs. In 1643 a union or confederation was effected between the colonies of Plymouth, Massachusetts, Connecticut and New Haven. The principal objects of this confederation were to secure harmonious co-operation in religious affairs, to establish an alliance offensive and defensive for the common defense.

The spirit of enterprise which found its first employment in controversies with the natives took another direction, and in the prosecution of commerce found the real source of prosperity and wealth. Frugal and prudent from necessity, and industrious from habit, the colonists continued to advance by sure and certain steps in their career of successful exertion until the breaking out of King Philip's war, which occurred nine years after the death of John Dunham. This war was the death struggle between the white and red men, and the fate not only of Plymouth but of all New England was involved in the issue.

Philip's residence and that of his native tribe was within the territorial jurisdiction of Plymouth, and therefore much of the danger and much of the suffering, which were occasioned by them, fell upon that colony.

The English were successful and secured the disposal of the lands of the Indians. The dominion of the colony was firmly established and the colonists were relieved from all apprehensions of Indian hostility. In 1692 Plymouth Colony was absorbed in that of Massachusetts. The people of Plymouth shared but few of the favors which the new government had to bestow, and it was seldom that any resident, in what was termed the "Old Colony," obtained any office or distinction in the Provincial government, or acquired any influence in its councils. Plymouth, however, may well be proud of the high distinctions which have been acquired by many of her native sons when placed in more genial clime. She has furnished her full proportion of talent, genius, learning and enterprise, in almost every department of life.

RESIDENCE AND LAND OF DEACON JOHN DUNHAM.

Deacon John Dunham's residence, after leaving the village, was located north of Watson's Hill and southwest of the village of Plymouth. To the west there was a swamp having an outlet into the Town Brook. This outlet, being on his land, was called Dunham's Brook. Two miles west by south of the village, was a large body of water called Billington Zee, which took the name from Francis Billington, who first discovered it. The Town brook is an outlet to this body of water. It has been enlarged by a flange and a pond. The old swamp and Dunham's Brook, by a flange flowing into Town brook, by means of a dam it has become a large pond. West of Billington Zee is a smaller pond from which it is separated by a narrow strip of land, which was publicly known as Dunham's neck. This strip was a portion of Deacon John Dunham's land. The highway leading to Carver was north of the ponds. South of Billington Zee within a radius of four-and-a-half miles there were, on the west, a number of ponds. Micajah's pond is one-and-a-half miles south from the Zee. This pond was within the lands of Micajah Dunham, a grandson of Deacon John Dunham. Three miles farther south, near the Carver line, was Dunham's pond. The land enclosing it was purchased by some of the descendants of Deacon John Dunham. Some of their offspring now live in the vicinity.

CHILDREN OF DEACON JOHN DUNHAM. Issue as follows: The children of John and Abigail Dunham were born in Plymouth, Mass., except John, the oldest, who was born in Leyden, Holland. I.—John was b. in 1620, in Leyden, Holland. He m., March 14, 1643, Dorothy ———, of Boston. His father granted him six acres of land next to his property, when John was 16 years old. When he was 21 years old he was given a meadow and 20 acres of land north-east of Josiah Cook's. He was admitted a freeman, March 7, 1643. He received grants of land by the General Court. In 1659 he was permitted by the court to select land for himself. In 1661 he and four others were allotted land at Sconset. In 1662 he was granted land by an act of the General Court, "To give to the first born of the Early Comers." In the same year he obtained a grant of land in Barnstable. In 1664, 1665 and 1674, he received additional grants of land. He died at Wellsfleet, Eastham, in 1692. He made his will, Feb. 2, 1691.

II.—Abigail was the first child b. at Plymouth. She was b. in 1623 and m. Stephen Wood.

III.—Thomas was b. in 1626. In 1646, when in minority, courted and m. Martha Knott. She was a dau. of George Knott, of Sandwich, who d. May 2, 1648, and mentions in his will, Thomas Dunham. His son, Jonathian, became one of the earliest of the New England Colonists, who settled in New Jersey. He made his will, April 2, 1705. His son, Thomas, became a minister and settled in Rye, Westchester County, N. Y., then in Connecticut. Nathaniel and Ephraim, sons of his brother Jonathian, for a time lived with Thomas, in Rye. Page 71, Vol. 11, Colonial Records of Connecticut, Oct., 1680, states, "Mr. Thomas Dunham minister at Rye—Court orders that the thirty pounds per annum agreed by Rye to be paid to the minister, Mr. Dunham, shall be gathered by the constable with the country rate in the same special price as the country rate and by him payed to the said minister, Oct., 1683." Mr. Thomas Dunham and Mr. Caleb Watson are accepted for freemen." While in Connecticut, Thomas was granted £10 for his services in the Indian war. One year after the marriage of Thomas, he sold, on the 14th of January, the 6 acres of land, given him by his father, to James Knott. He had been publicly reprimanded for his courtship with Martha Knott. On this account he was led to sell this lot which his father had given him and to leave the colony. He studied at the district school and local academy, but after a year's attendance at Mount Union College, Ohio, circumstances prevented him from continuing his course. He returned to Connecticut, in 1865; engaged two years in teaching and afterwards studied law in the office of Hon. Chas. E. Mitchell, of New Britain; was meantime clerk of the police court and editor of the New Britain Record; was admitted to the Hartford County bar, in 1871; a year later entered the office of Hon. Henry C. Robinson, of Hartford, and practiced law until 1883. After being admitted to the bar, Mr. Dunham continued with Mr. Robinson for twelve years, until his election as city attorney of Hartford. He held this office two years. At the end of his term he accepted the position of secretary of the Corbin companies of New Britain. Two years later he resigned to become general counsel for the Travelers' Insurance Co., and was elected a director in January, 1897. His able administration of the duties of counsel and his thorough acquaintance with the financial interests of the company made him the logical candidate for the vice-presidency, in January, 1899, and foreshadowed his election to the presidency, October 14, 1901. THOMAS DUNHAM.

THOMAS DUNHAM, son of Deacon John Dunham. III.—Thomas Dunham, b. in Plymouth, Mass., 1626; m. Martha Knott, of Sandwich, dau. of George Knott, in 1646. She d. May 5, 1648. Her father in his will mentions Thomas Dunham as a legatee. Thomas's courtship with Martha was extensively criticised and he was subsequently disciplined by the authorities. This appears to have been a source of discomfort to him, and he left the colony for a number of years, and during that time located in Hartford, Connecticut. While there, in 1658, he was awarded ten pounds for his services in the Indian war, by Plymouth. He returned to Plymouth and was present in 1669 at the death of his father. His sons had arrived at the age of maturity and were acting for themselves. Four years after his father's death he was made constable of Plymouth. It is not stated when or where he died. His cottage was sold to Benjamin Eaton, in 1677. This property may have included the six acres of land from his father, donated in 1647, and the land he bought of Anthony Snow in 1645. Many of his descendants adopted the name Donham.

1 JONATHAN, son of Thomas Dunham, was b. in Plymouth, 1646, resided for a time in Hartford and New Haven. He was a farmer and acquired a knowledge of the milling business. New Jersey, in 1665, gave grants of land between Rahway and Raritan rivers to many of the settlers in Eastern New England, as an inducement for them to settle in their colony. Among those who took advantage of the offer were the Dunhams, Bloomfields and Marshes of Connecticut. Jonathan Dunham received a grant for 210 acres of land on the Passaic river as a bonus for conducting a flour mill for the benefit of the people. This mill was built by him in 1672. He m. There are some writers, who, in speaking of the early settlers of New Jersey, state that the earliest of the Dunhams was Jonathan Dunham, a notorious vagabond, from Haverhill, Massachusetts, who had assumed this name, and finally designated himself "Jonathan Donham alias Singletary." He was a Singletary. As such a record of his family has been given. He coming into the Colony about the same time in which Jonathan Donham located there, has, to a certain extent, mystified the records.

There is no public record showing when or where Jonathan Dunham alias Singletary died. The only information given is that he left a will and that it was the source of much annoyance and contention among the litigants. Jonathan Singletary, with Robert Latriere was arrested on the seventh of September, 1677, by John Ogden, sheriff of Achter Colony for removing goods from Governor Phillip Carteret's house and was condemned for the act. On the 16th of July preceding he had been ordered by the Council of War for Achter Colony to pay five pounds costs and punished as a mad-man. This Council consisted of Captain Benajah Dunham, Piscattaway, John Pike, Woodbridge, etc. At this time Jonathan Donham, who, in 1670, was granted 270 acres of land to erect a flour mill, must have been well known as a miller. Singletary then left Woodbridge, and in 1683, appears in Plymouth as appears by the records of that colony, where he assumed the name of Jonathan Dunham as follows: Whereas, "Jonathan Dunham, alias Shingletary" absented himself from his wife and family, though advised and warned for some considerable time by the authorities hath been wandering from place to place as a vagabond in the colony, also disseminating his corrupt principles and drawing another man's wife, she following up and down against her husband's consent; and he at last accompanying a young woman, called Mary Ross, led by enthusiastic power, he says, hee must doe what she bade him, and accordingly, did both of them on her motion, at the house of John Irish at Little Compton killed his dogg, against the declared will of the said John Irish, and although he did put them out of his house, they would go in againe, and according to their antics and foolish power, made a fier and threw the dogg upon it and shot off a gun several times, and burnt some other things several times in the house, to the hazard of burning his house and young children, keeping the doors and not opening them to the said John Irish when he came with some of his neighbors to rescue the same to the disturbance of the Colony. Having been driven from Plymouth, he returns to Woodbridge under his assumed name. He here accumulated a little property during the following six years for as shown by the record in the office of the Surveyor General, he had acquired and deeded to his Mary Ross, as follows:

665 PERRY JACKSON, b. May 25, 1822; m., 1st, Matilda McClain; 2d, Melissa Dudley; 3d, Sallie (Phebe) Smith; d. Jan. 15, 1903. He studied at Jefferson College, Pennsylvania, and read law at Georgetown with General Thomas Hamer, shortly before the outbreak of the Mexican war. He was admitted to the bar in Clermont County in 1848, practiced his profession in New Richmond until 1865, then a few years at Portsmouth, Ohio, and afterward located at Cincinnati, where he continued in the practice of the law until 1890. He removed to New Richmond in 1883, and then purchased the beautiful home in which he died. He was thrice married, his first wife being a daughter of Captain William McClain, the famous Ohio River steamboat captain. She was the mother of four children, two boys, Willie and Charlie, who died in infancy, and two girls, Belle, who died in 1878, and Carrie, the surviving wife of Furman Brooks, of Portsmouth, Ohio, and who now resides at Gambier, Ohio, educating her only daughter, Beatrice. His second wife was Melissa Dudley, who lived but a few years after their marriage. His third wife, and who survives him, was Mrs. Sallie Smith, their marriage occurring on the 3d day of August, 1880. Mr. Donham was singularly fortunate in all his marriages. Helpful and faithful, their counsels and companionship was the dearest thing earth gave him. He loved his children, sought their every comfort, and his heart warmed in their well-being and well-doing. Mr. Donham was a lawyer of great power, and in the ante-bellum days his services were eagerly sought by a very large client age in Southern Clermont. He was a man of fine personal appearance, and an earnest, logical and finished speaker. Stately, commanding, erect, ample in speech, graceful in compliments, courteous to a degree, rich in illustrations, ready in wit, profusely humorous, he became one of Clermont's most gifted sons. He was a Clermonter through and through—proud of his county that was and ever will be proud of him. He thought the Ohio Valley was the finest spot on earth and loved the Ohio River as a mother loves her child. He was a perfect gentleman, with a suavity of manner that always bespoke him such. He was a proud man, but not a vain one. "Vanity rests on the opinion of others; pride on our own. The source of vanity is from without; of pride, from within. Vanity is a vane that turns; a willow that bends with every breeze. Pride is the oak that defies the storm—one is cloud, the other rock; one is weakness, the other strength." Proud though he was, he was easily approachable; generous in heart, magnanimous to a foe, and sympathetic with all tenderness. Issue: 690. I.—Belle, m., 1st, Emmett Aukeny; 2d, Thomas W. Romulus Barnes, who graduated at Yale University and Theological Seminary. Full of religious zeal and enthusiasm she enlisted with her husband in the work of building of the Kingdom of God in the then wilderness of Illinois, under A. H. M. S. The dangers from hostile Indians and the deprivations endured by those Pioneers is a part of the history of the country. The Barnes' were some of the earliest to engage the Bondmen and in the cause Mrs. Barnes was in full and active sympathy. They were ostracized by neighbors and by many churches. They were many times threatened and several times assaulted by Proslavery mobs and upon one occasion she was severely wounded by a stone thrown by one of the mob. By the death of her husband in 1846, she was left with eight children, the oldest fourteen years of age. It is sufficient testimony to her ability and strength of purpose, that five of the seven children, who reached maturity were graduates from a college or seminary.

He, besides his widow, left an adopted daughter, Princess Hatzelfeldt, and an adopted son, Arthur M. Huntington, of New York City. Collis Potter was the most extensive railroad builder in the world. His philanthropy extended, principally, to another and unfortunate race—the Negro. His magnificent gifts to the Hampton Institute, and the Tuskegee School have enabled both institutions to prepare their students for practical life, and in his death the Negro has lost a great, wise and true friend. His will discloses, to some extent, his immense wealth, which he had accumulated, and also showed the same wisdom in disposing of money, which must have characterized his life. He died at his camp in the Adirondacks, Aug. 18, 1900, and his remains taken to New York City, where his funeral from his Fifth Avenue residence, was conducted with simplicity. The interment was made in the Huntington Mausoleum in Woodlawn Cemetery. 495. VII.—Joseph, b. March 23, 1823; d. in Warsaw, N. Y., Feb. 23, 1849. 496. VIII.—Susan L., b. Aug., 1826; m. 502 HENRY EDWARDS HUNTINGTON, son of Solon Huntington and Harriet Saunders Huntington, of Oneonta, New York, was b. February 27, 1850, at Oneonta. The Huntingtons in America began with Simon Huntington, who sailed from Norwich, England, in 1632, and whose family settled at Roxbury, Mass. Among his descendants were Jabez Huntington, Senior and Junior, both general officers in the Revolutionary army; Ebenezer Huntington, adjutant general and Connecticut representative in Congress for two terms; Samuel Huntington, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence; president of the Continental Congress and chief justice and governor of Connecticut and lastly, the late Collis Potter Huntington, the great railroad financier, who built the Central Pacific and Southern Pacific systems, and many other lines of railroad, founder of the City of Newport News and of its well-known shipyard. Educated in his native town, Henry Edwards Huntington at an early age started out to carve his own way in life. Beginning in a hardware store at Oneonta he soon came to New York to find a wider sphere of usefulness and there quickly attracted the attention of his famous uncle, C. P. Huntington, who sent him to West Virginia to take charge of certain lumber interests which had acquired importance in the elder man's eyes on account of a combination that had been formed among the sellers of railroad ties to put up the price of the commodity. The young man acquitted himself with such credit that in 1881 he was appointed by his uncle, superintendent of construction of the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern Railroad from Louisville to Memphis; thence he transferred his field of work to the Kentucky Central Railroad, filling successively the offices of superintendent, general manager and vice-president, until he took charge in 1890 of the Newport News & Mississippi Valley Railroad, between Memphis and New Orleans. In 1892, C. P. Huntington, then president of the Southern Pacific Co., rewarded the years of loyal and efficient management and the proven intelligence, resource and good judgment of the nephew by appointing him assistant to the president of all the Southern Pacific lines and he went to San Francisco where he became the alter ego of his uncle and the real head on the Pacific Coast of the vast properties with which he was connected. In 1900, he was made second vice-president, and a few months later became first vice-president. A few years ago Mr. Huntington made the most decisive business step of his whole life. In Los Angeles there was a street railway which languished for the lack of a strong management. Mr. Huntington's far-seeing mind had long before perceived the tremendous importance of electricity applied to railway operation and he secured the control of this stagnant property. With the assumption of his ownership a vigorous energy and life was instilled into the management of the Los Angeles Railway, which quickly improved and increased until a system of vast possibilities and earning power was established. He and a few wealthy friends formed a syndicate of some fifteen millions, procured franchises of great value and incorporated the Pacific Electric and the Los Angeles Inter-Urban Railway Companies for the construction of suburban lines. To-day Mr. Huntington stands in the very front rank of electric railway builders and operators and to him is given credit for the new and flourishing life of that large section of California which his railway lines serve. Like his distinguished uncle his work in life has been the creation of permanent industries giving employment to thousands of his fellow-men. Like him, also, he has never accepted or desired public office of any kind. Mr. Huntington is an officer or director of more than fifty corporations and banks. He m. Jan. 29, 1891, Marianna Elkins, at Dorchester, Mass. George A. Denham is of Puritan stock. His father, the Rev. George Dunham, was an Episcopalian minister, a prominent figure in religious conferences fifty (50) years ago, and a direct descendant of John Denham, one of the early settlers who the Mayflower brought over from Southern England. His mother was a Thacher, of the old shipbuilding family of that name. Most of the whaling vessels that sailed from New Bedford when that port was the center of the whaling industry, came from the shipyards of Matthew Thacher. Rev. George Denham's parents always lived in Plymouth where the original settlers located, and where the succeeding generations of the family followed their life pursuits. George A. Denham was b. at South Dartmouth, a suburb of New Bedford, Mass., July 12th, 1849. He was the second eldest of six children and was first sent to school at Wellfleet, Mass. He finished his education at Chelsea, Mass., and Nashua, N. H., most of his schooling being received at Chelsea. In 1867 he engaged in business at Boston in the employ of Henry Jones & Co., ship timber dealers. He remained with this firm one year, entering the employ of Jewett & Pitcher, lumber dealers in 1868 and continuing with them for four years. As a manufacturer of mouldings he started in business for himself in the spring of 1872, and in the fall of that year, in the disastrous fire that swept so large a part of Boston, his factories at Congress and Purchase Streets were burned to the ground. No event could have served better to bring out the indomitable pluck and energy of the man. The city suffering from the shock of a great calamity, chaotic conditions existing in business circle everywhere, thousands ruined, and himself facing probable bankruptcy through the inability of the insurance companies to meet their tremendous losses, George A. Denham proved the sturdiness of his ancestral stock. He did not whimper, although the blow cut deep. The ruins of his old factory were still warm when he had the lease of other quarters and had his men at work fitting up for active operation. Sunday morning, Nov. 10th, saw his first establishment raised to the ground and the following Tuesday at 7 o'clock a. m., saw him newly installed with his entire force of employes pushing ahead on the work that the fire had interrupted, and long before the majority of Boston's business men had begun to recover from the paralyzing stupor into which the disaster had thrown them. It was a remarkable feat in the face of such adverse circumstances. But this was not the only instance in which he proved to possess rare executive ability. He was only 24 years of age, when he bid for and secured a large contract with the Massachusetts State Prison, during which he had in his employ upwards of 400 men. At the successful termination of this state contract he embarked in the wholesale boot and shoe business, which he followed from 1879 to 1890, at which latter date he organized the American Palace Car Company, to manufacture under newly granted patents an improved sanitary sleeping car, being a parlor, sleeping and dining car combined. George A. Denham m. in East Boston, in 1871, Mary H. Loughton, of Portsmouth, N. H., whose death was recorded on Feb. 2, 1879, at the same place. There were four children from this union. In 1891, at Dorchester, Mass., he m. Marianna Elkins, of Nantucket, Mass., making his home at Dorchester. From the organization of the American Palace Car Company, in 1890, Mr. Denham has devoted his entire time to, and is at present the executive head of that corporation, making his business headquarters in New York City, while maintaining his residence, in Dorchester, Mass. Later, he started in business for himself and had a rope-walk off Boylston Street, the building being constructed on piles over the water of the back bay near the present Public Garden. Thomas Harrison Dunham, Sr., son of Josiah and Mary Ann (Elms) Dunham, was b. June 30, 1815, at Pleasant Street Boston. He graduated from the Old Hawes School and was a Franklin Medal graduate of the English High School. About the year 1835, he engaged in the dry goods business at the corner of Fourth Street and Dorchester Turnpike (now Dorchester Avenue), in South Boston. On April 11, 1839, he was m. to Eliza Ann West, of St. Johnsbury, Vt.; d. Dec. 25, 1818. Two children were b. Thomas Harrison, Jr., July 30, 1840 and William Bradford, Aug. 13, 1842. Mr. Dunham continued in the dry goods business until about the year 1846, and then went into the importing and wholesaling of hemp at a store on India Street and also became interested in the manufacture of cordage at Plymouth, Mass. For about ten years following, he was engaged in the cordage business in Providence, R. I., spending a part of his time in each city. On April 1, 1846, he m. at Providence, Alsa R. Burgess, who was b. March 17, 1820, at Harvard, Mass. There were six children by this marriage. In 1858, soon after the death of his father, Mr. Dunham started a cotton shoddy mill on Harrison Avenue, Boston, and during the Civil war manufactured lint and cotton batting for the use of the army. He also manufactured carpet linings and other cotton goods and continued to operate the mill until 1870, when he sold the land upon which the mill stood to the Catholic Church, the land being a part of the site of the St. James' Cathedral. About the year 1875, he again engaged in the manufacture of cordage at Plymouth and invented a kind of cotton rope, obtaining a patent for the process of its manufacture. Mr. Dunham was an ardent expounder of the gospel and occasionally preached from the bandstand on Boston Common. His death occurred Dec. 14, 1899, at Boston.

1379 JOSIAH DUNHAM, JUNIOR, b. in Boston, Mass., March 8, 1804. Until 1853 he was connected with his father in the manufacture of cordage, after which he engaged, principally, in real estate transactions, acquiring considerable property. On attaining his majority he joined the Masonic Fraternity, becoming a Master Mason in Columbian Lodge, September, 1825. He was one of the organizers of freemasonry, in South Boston; a charter member of St. Paul's Lodge, in 1846, and for more than 28 years its treasurer. He joined the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company in 1828, continuing in membership until his death. In 1836 he was active in the formation of a company of militia, the Pulaski Guards, and became its first captain. In 1853 he became a life member of the New England Historic Genealogical Society; a member of the Bunker Hill Monument Association of the Pilgrim Society of "A Republican Institution" (chartered 1819), and other public and social organizations. For many years he was active in politics, and had great influence in his party. His connection with the city government of Boston commenced, in 1837, when he was elected to the office of councilman, serving again in that capacity in 1849, 1850 and 1851. In 1854 and 1855, he represented South Boston, in the board of aldermen. In 1860 he was a delegate to the National Republican Convention in Chicago, which nominated Abraham Lincoln for the presidency. From 1861 to 1865 he held the office of naval storekeeper at the navy yard in Charlestown. He was a communicant of St. Mathew's (Episcopal) Church, a member of its vestry and was greatly interested in the work of the church, giving liberally of his means therefor.

Few men in Boston had a more extensive acquaintance, or who were more zealous in behalf of the interests of the section of the city he represented in its government, and many of the public improvements in South Boston are due to his energy and foresight. Mr. Dunham was a man of strong personality, thoroughly public spirited, untiring in his labors for any undertaking tending to the welfare of his native city, benevolent and liberal in his benefactions, giving without ostentation. Socially, he enjoyed the friendship of a large circle and was a staunch friend. He d. April 17, 1877.

PHINEAS DUNHAM was b. in Piscataway, New Jersey, Dec. 11, 1764; was m. Nov. 13, 1788, to Zerniah Dunham, who was b. March 3, 1764. After their marriage they settled near their native place where six children were b. In 1802 they emigrated to the wilds of Western Pennsylvania and located on a farm, which he had purchased about twelve miles north of Meadville. The journey was made in wagons and took about six weeks' time, following the route by Bald Eagle, now Belleforte. As the roads were scarcely more than Indian trails, it is wonderful that they should have had, according to tradition, but one accident on the way, that being the upsetting of a wagon which was not attended by any serious results. Their domestic animals were driven with them, and each morning the bucket containing the milk was hung under the wagon, and by night the butter was churned ready for the evening meal. After weary days, and nights full of fear, they arrived at their new home. It and the surroundings were so wild and desolate, that they completely discouraged the brave pioneer, who had guided and guarded them safely through all their wearisome journey, and he turning to his wife, said, "Zerniah, we cannot live here, we will not unpack, but we will go back home again." "No, Phineas," said his energetic wife, "You brought me here, and here I will stay." After remaining here three or four years, they removed to a farm which he purchased just north of Meadville, a beautiful prairie, long known as "Dunham's Flats." Here they established the lovely home, the memory of which is so cherished by the few living grand-children. The house built with heavy hewn logs, was fashioned after the New Jersey homesteads, one-and-a-half stories in height, with a porch along the entire front covered with vines and bordered with flowers. A wide hall with a plain staircase divided the house and terminated in an out kitchen. On the right it opened into an immense kitchen, whose sand-polished floor and general order made it no mean place for the entertaining of company. On each side of the huge fireplace was a large pantry, from which could be drawn, at any time, all the requisites for a satisfactory meal. In the fireplace hung the large iron crane, with its pots and kettles, and in front stood the "Reflector," a large tin box with three sides, and open front with two shelves, in which by the reflected heat were baked the cakes, pies and puddings, while the bread was baked in the iron "Dutch oven," or in the large brick one outside.

No one, who has ever visited one of these old-time homesteads, can forget the cheer and beauty of the light and heat from these large fireplaces, particularly, in the evening, when the pine knots were thrown on, the beautiful play of the light on the brass candlesticks on the mantel, the brass warming pan on the wall, and pewter kitchen ware polished and shining distributed around, while from the joists hung the guns, game bags, shot pouches and other implements for hunting or defense. Out of the kitchen opened the private sitting and bedroom of the heads of the family. On the opposite side of the hall was "the room" kept for formal hospitality, the corner cupboard filled with dainty china, the samplers hung beside the family silhouettes on the wall, the old-fashioned furniture, and the floor covered with a handsome striped carpet of home manufacture, all combined to make a picture pleasing to the eye and gratifying to the taste. Adjoining "the room" were two guest chambers, the family bedrooms were up stairs.

In that home full of plenty and happiness the family grew to manhood and womanhood, the sons occupied, with their father, in tilling the ground and preparing the wool and flax for feminine hands, the daughters and their mother in the manifold duties of the household, which included the carding and spinning of all yarn, which was afterwards woven into the cloth and flannel for clothing and the linen for sheets and tablecloths. All, however, was not labor, for much recreation added enjoyment to their lives, the mother was a notable housewife and her delightful hospitality was known afar, her daughters were handsome, her sons were gallant, and an invitation from Mrs. Dunham was considered a compliment highly prized by the recipient. She lived to be over one hundred years of age, and died July 16, 1864. Her death was regretted by all who knew her. Her husband died Feb. 10, 1844.

Lot P. Dunham, b. at Piscataway, New Jersey, Nov. 27, 1793; moved with his father, Phineas Dunham, in 1802, to Crawford Co., Pa.; was m. Oct. 27, 1825, to Catharine Herron Mead, whose father, Gen. David Mead, was the founder of Meadville, Pa. On his marriage he built a house and settled on a part of the old homestead assigned him by his father, where he lived a happy uneventful life and d. March 15, 1875. He was always a farmer and although his early educational advantages were limited, he kept himself posted in the world's progress and was interested in its doings. When quite a young man he served in defence of his country in the war of 1812. In politics he was an old line Whig and always was true to the principles of his party. Until sometime after his marriage, he kept the traditions of his fathers and observed the "Seventh Day," but in deference to his wife, he changed to the "Lord's Day," and worshipped with her in the Episcopal Church. Late in life he was baptized and received into the communion of that church, and died trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ. He was a tender and dutiful son, a devoted brother, a faithful and loving husband, and was honored and beloved by his children and friends. He was always chivalrons to women and fond of children and in his old age, he was never so happy as when he had one grandchild on each arm of his chair and the baby on his knee, he would relate his adventures with the bears and rattlesnakes in his youth or recall the incidents of his visits to "dear old Jersey." He was handsome in appearance with a courtesy of manner that commended him to all who knew him.

Maria Dunham Reynolds was lovely in features and characteristics. One needed to be admitted to the intimacy of her home-life in order to fully appreciate the grace and tenderness and gentle womanliness of her character. For nearly fifty-one years a member of the First Presbyterian Church, the sincerity of her Christian profession was evinced by proof manifold and constant. In her tongue was the law of kindness, in her common every day life shone the spirit of her Saviour. "Her works praise her in the gates." "Her children rise up and call her blessed."

Edward A. Reynolds was in boyhood, sent to school at Meadville, and from that date remained there and entered into active business, and filled many public offices of trust. In 1818 he was appointed clerk of the board of county commissioners. In 1830 he was appointed Protonotary of Crawford County by Gov. Wolf; that office he held two consecutive terms, or until the adoption of the amended State Constitution of 1839, by provision of which all county officers were made elective. He was elected brigade inspector, with rank and title of major by the military division of Crawford County, and for seven years filled that position, through which he became generally known to the people of his own and adjoining counties. Early in life he became connected with the First Presbyterian Church, and was chosen ruling elder for 46 years or until his death.

Rebecca and Samuel Lord lived and d. in Meadville, leaving a large family which has become scattered. I cannot give any record of them. Mrs. Wm. Magaw, of Meadville, being Clara Lord and Mrs. Rebecca Lord Morris, of New York City, being granddaughters and children of Lewis Lord.

Simeon Dunham Reynolds, d. at London, Tennessee, June 28, 1880, at the home of the Johnston family. His devotion to his wife was fully repaid by the same attention and loving tenderness by her family, with whom he remained after her death. In the year 1850, he went to Tennessee and was interested in the construction of the East Tennessee and Georgia Railroad. He assisted in the construction of that part of the road between Dalton, Ga., and the Hwassee River, also on other branches. For a greater portion of the time since that, he was a stockholder and director of the road. He was at the siege of Vicksburg and an officer with rank of major, under General Pemberton.

DANIEL DUNHAM.

X.—DANIEL, the son of Deacon John Dunham, was b. in Plymouth, 1639; m. Melitable Hayward. He was admitted a Freeman, in 1660, and in the following year was appointed highway surveyor. He became a land proprietor in Plymouth and Plymton. He resided for a time in Bridgewater and Dorchester. Thomas Hayward and his wife, Melitable Hayward, were the children of John Hayward, one of the original proprietors of Bridgewater. He d. in 1681. John Hayward came to this country in the same vessel with John Ames, son of Richard Ames, of Sommersetshire, England, who m. in 1645, Elizabeth Hayward, of Bridgewater. Thomas Hayward, the brother of Daniel's wife, was killed by a fall from a horse in 1698. While a resident of Dorchester, Daniel became acquainted with the father of Rev. Samuel Wiswall, with whom a strong friendship was formed. Rev. Samuel Wiswall was the successor of Rev. Jonathan Dunham, of Edgartown, Martha's Vineyard. The Wiswalls were highly respected and well educated. The father and son had received the honorary college degree of A. M.

Samuel Wiswall was b. Sept. 2, 1679; he was undoubtedly selected as an assistant pastor by Rev. Jonathan Dunham through the recommendation of his brother, Daniel. Samuel Wiswall was ordained at Edgartown in 1713. He then became assistant pastor and remained as such until the death of Rev. Jonathan Dunham in 1717. He afterwards continued as the pastor until the time of his death, December 23, 1746. Samuel Wiswall was 67 years old when he died. Ichabod, the son of Samuel Wiswall, b. in 1704; m. in 1725, Jerusha Norton, dau. of John Norton, of Boston. She was a sister of Jemima Norton, who m. Cornelius Dunham, grandson of Rev. These facts are some of the evidence that shows the friendly relations existing between the Dunhams and Wiswalls. Rev. Jonathan Dunham honored the name of his brother when he named his first son, Daniel Dunham.

4 DANIEL, b. in Dorchester, 1675; m. in Rhode Island, in 1696, Elizabeth ———. Issue: 98. I.—Daniel, b. 1705; m. Elizabeth ———. 99. II.—William, b. 1708; m. (1) name unknown; (2) Feb. 11, 1756, Mary Taylor. Daniel and William Dunham were among the original settlers of Georgia and South Carolina. They located at Dorchester and Newport. It is stated they gave the names to those places in honor of the places in which they had previously lived, and of the residence of their mother in Rhode Island. Before locating they landed at Fernidina, Florida, in 1732. Daniel moved his family on the first of April, 1756, to Midway and Newport, Ga., where the history of his family is lost. The father of Daniel and William was a Congregationalist, adhering to the teaching of the Pilgrims, but their mother was a Baptist. The first settlement of Georgia was made during the reign of George II, King of England. This miserable condition of his countrymen at that time made it necessary for him to act in their behalf. For the purpose of bettering their condition, he gave them a charter, granting them the use of land in Georgia without compensation for twenty-one years, that they might here begin life anew. With this in view, General James Oglethorpe founded a Board of Trustees to carry out the design. He made a number of trips to Georgia, selecting the best colonists he could find to accompany him. One of the expeditions he stopped on the eastern coast of Massachusetts. Daniel and William Dunham at this time joined the company. In the second trip General Oglethorpe took with him Charles Wesley, as his secretary, and John Wesley as a missionary to the Indians. These were famous preachers with whom the Methodist movements began in England. At the same time the Wesleys organized the Methodist Society in Georgia, the Congregationalist, now Presbyterian Church, was started by the Dunhams.

99 WILLIAM, m. (2) Mary Taylor, Feb. 2, 1756. William the brother of Daniel retained his residence at Dorchester and through him has the Dunham name been perpetuated in South Carolina. The same religious relations that existed in his father's family continued in his. He was a Congregationalist and his wife a Baptist. He was twice married, first in Massachusetts and second to Mary Taylor. Married in 1756. This was a few days before his brother left for Georgia. William, d. Dec. 23, 1769; made a will which bears a date prior to his death; all previous wills were set aside for the purpose of disinheriting his son, John, who had married a wife unknown to him and against his wishes. After his death the children ignored the will and gave John his full share. Issue: 100. I.—John m. Sarah Clancey. In 1779, he located in Liberty County, Ga. 101. II.—William. 102. III.—Charles, m. Mary. 103. IV.—Mary. 104. V.—Esther. 105. VI.—Martha, m. Mr. Jones. 106. VII.—Hannah. 107. VIII.—Paul James. 108. IX.—Daniel, d. young.

Extract from William Dunham's Will. "Item. I give and bequeath to my son John the use of one-fifth part of my lands and one-ninth part of my personal estate, not as yet given during his life, and at his death I give and bequeath it to his children to be equally divided amongst them; but for want of such children to return and equally divided amongst the rest of my children and their heirs forever." This will goes on and gives his lands and money and personal and household property to his wife and children, plainly divided shear and shear, lands to the sons, money to the daughters. The closing item is this. "I give and bequeath to my loving wife Mary Dunham and my six children viz; William, Charles, Mary, Esther, Martha, Hannah, Paul, James and the child that my wife is now pregnant with, all the remainder. Thus it seems that he did not put John's name with his children. The child his wife was pregnant with was a son. He was named Daniel, but did not reach manhood. After William Dunham's death his children ignored his will as far as cutting off John went; and gave him his full share of his father's property, just the same as though his last will had never been made.

presidency of that company, but accepting the position of general superintendent, which position he filled until December, 1878, when he was appointed superintendent of the South & North Alabama Railroad, filling that office during 1879, and in 1880, in addition to his other work, he was made superintendent of the Mobile & Montgomery Railroad, Selma Division of the Western Railroad of Alabama, and the Pineapple Division of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, which position he held until his resignation in May, 1881, when he accepted the position of general manager of the Virginia Midland Railway (now the Southern), but before taking charge of that office he went West and accepted the position of general manager of the western lines of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. He was also made president of three of the roads of that system, viz: The Baltimore, Pittsburgh & Chicago Railway of Ohio; the Baltimore, Pittsburgh & Chicago Railroad of Indiana, and the Baltimore, Pittsburgh & Chicago Railroad of Illinois. He resigned the above office in 1883. From November, 1883, to July, 1884, Mr. Dunham was general manager of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, at which time he returned to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad as assistant to the vice-president, until he was elected general manager of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad system, reorganizing the various interests under one head, which office he held until December, 1886, when he resigned, retired from railroad life and returned to Montgomery, Alabama, where he filled the office of president of the Montgomery Iron Works, president of the Electric Light & Power Company, and general manager of the Highland Park Improvement Company. He was afterwards elected to the office of vice-president and general superintendent of the Montgomery & Florida Railroad Company, and the same year was made receiver of that company in both lower and high courts until the litigation was closed and he became general superintendent and trustee for the owners of the property until its purchase by the A. T. & I. Company, builders of the Alabama Midland Railway, when he was appointed general superintendent of the Alabama Midland Railway, which position he occupied from September, 1889, to February 15th, 1895, when he was appointed general superintendent of the Plant System of Railways, reorganizing the various railways under one general system. This office he filled until January 23d, 1900, when he resigned. Mr. Dunham being a civil engineer, as well as a mechanical engineer, and being a practical man identified with the physical operation of railroads in all departments, all his life, given him advantages in the management of railroad properties, not possessed by many railroad men.

A friend of Mr. Bradford Dunham furnishes the following sketch of the history of that gentleman: Mr. Dunham was born at Cedar Point, Liberty County, Ga., June 19, 1838. He lived on a farm until about seventeen years of age, his first regular occupation being that of a cowboy, and I have often heard him say that at that time if he could have secured a Winchester rifle, he would have much preferred the plains. After leaving the farm, he clerked in wholesale and retail stores for eighteen months. He then entered a machine shop and worked for three years. In 1860 he went to Savannah, Ga., and secured a position as freight forwarding clerk for the Central Railroad of Georgia. In 1861 he worked on the Atlantic & Gulf Railroad as freight conductor, and afterwards as passenger conductor. In 1862 he operated the Brunswick & Albany Railroad (now the Brunswick & Western), between Brunswick and Tebeauville (now Waycross), Ga., under orders from Governor Jos. E. Brown, who had taken charge of the road as a military necessity. For two months in 1862, Mr. Dunham worked on the Charleston & Savannah Railway as brakeman and freight conductor. In July of that year he went to the Alabama & Florida Railroad of Alabama, as a clerk, in which capacity he served until December of the same year, when he was promoted to the position of master of transportation, which office he filled until he was made assistant superintendent and master of transportation, three years later. In 1867 Mr. Dunham went to the Montgomery & Eufaula Railroad, as superintendent of construction, and master of transportation, and in November of the same year was made superintendent of the road, which position he held until August, 1870, doing, in addition, the work of road master and master mechanic.
